Addison amassed . . . three folios of manuscript materials before he began his 'Spectator.'

SMILES Self-Help ch. 5, p. 158. [H. 1876.]

II. i. [Archaic.] To meet together: assemble. [< F. amasser, < à (< L. ad), to, + masser, < masse; see MASS¹, n.]

Syn.: accumulate, aggregate, collect, gather, heap up, hoard, hoard up, pile up, store up. With some occasional exceptions, accumulate is applied to the more gradual, amass to the more rapid gathering of money or materials, amass referring to the general result or bulk, accumulate to the particular process or rate of gain. We say interest is accumulated (or accumulates) rather than is amassed; he accumulated a fortune in the course of years; he rapidly amassed a fortune by shrewd speculations. Goods or money for immediate distribution are said to be collected rather than amassed. They may be stored up for a longer or shorter time; but to hoard is always with a view of permanent retention, generally selfish. Aggregate is now most commonly used of numbers and amounts; as, the expenses will aggregate a round million.— Ant.: disperse, dissipate, divide, parcel, portion, scatter, spend, squander, waste.— Prep.: amass for oneself, for a purpose, from a distance, with great labor, by industry.

am"a-teur', n. 1. One who practises an art, especially a fine art, not as a livelihood or professionally, but for the love of it; as, an amateur in music. See synonyms.

The word amateur itself suggests a real interest.

MACDONALD Annals of Quiet Neighbourhood p. 384. [n. & s.]

2. Often, one who amuses himself with an art, but is not a master of it; one who makes more or less pretense to practising an art without having undergone professional preparation. 3. Sport. An athlete who has not engaged in contests open to professional athletes, or used any athletic art as a livelihood. The term varies in usage and definition according to the changeable regulations of athletic associations. 4. [Archaic.] One who is fond of or interested in anything; an admirer; as, an amateur of musical genius or of the table. [F. < L. amator, lover, < amo, love.]

Syn.: connoisseur, critic, dilettante, novice, professional, tyro. Etymologically, the amateur is one who loves, the connoisseur one who knows. In usage, the word amateur carries a natural implication of superficialness, tho marked excellence is at times attained by amateurs. A connoisseur is supposed to be so thoroughly informed regarding any art or work as to be able to criticize or select intelligently and authoritatively; there are many incompetent critics, but there can not, in the true sense, be an incompetent connoisseur. The amateur practises to some extent that in regard to which he may not be well informed: the connoisseur is well informed in regard to that which he may not practise at all. A novice or tyro may be a professional; an amateur never is; the amateur may be skilled and experienced as the novice or tyro never is. Dilettante, which had originally the sense of amateur, has to some extent come to denote one who is superficial, pretentious, and affected, whether in theory or practise.— Prep.: an amateur in art.

— am"a-teur'dom, n.— am"a-teur'ish, a. Suggestive of an amateur or his work; unskilful; feeble; crude; faulty. — -ly, adv.— -ness, n.— am"a-teur'ism, n. The state of being an amateur; also, the general character or condition of being amateurish, unskilled, or faulty.— am"a-teur'ship, n. The character or quality of an amateur.

2. One who or that which amazes; as, the juggler was the amazement of the whole city. 3†. Frenzy; stupefaction; dementia. 4†. Consternation; alarm.

Syn.: admiration, astonishment, awe, bewilderment, confusion, perplexity, surprize, wonder. Amazement and astonishment both express the momentary overwhelming of the mind by that which is beyond expectation. Astonishment especially affects the emotions, amazement the intellect. Awe is the yielding of the mind to something supremely grand in character or formidable in power, and ranges from apprehension or dread to reverent worship. Admiration includes delight and regard. Surprize lies midway between astonishment and amazement, and usually respects matters of lighter consequence or such as are less startling in character. Amazement may be either pleasing or painful, as when induced by the grandeur of the mountains, or by the fury of the storm. We can say pleased surprize, but scarcely pleased astonishment. Amazement has in it something of confusion or bewilderment; but confusion and bewilderment may occur without amazement, as when a multitude of details require instant attention. Astonishment may be without bewilderment or confusion. Wonder is often pleasing, and may be continuous in view of that which surpasses our comprehension; as, the magnitude, order, and beauty of the heavens fill us with increasing wonder. See PERPLEXITY.— Ant.: anticipation, calmness, composure, coolness, indifference, preparation, self-possession, steadiness, stoicism.— Prep.: at.

The superior privileges of ambassadors relate to precedence and etiquette, not to essential rights and powers. The Congress of Vienna in 1815 constituted them the highest of the three classes into which it divided diplomatic officers, treating them as the representatives of one personal sovereign to another. Republics, however, had sent, and still send, ambassadors. The Constitution of the United States authorizes their appointment, but the government gave its representatives no higher title than envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary till 1893, when Congress provided for raising to ambassadorial rank ministers to countries which should send ambassadors to the United States.

2. In a popular sense, any diplomatic agent of high rank, as a minister plenipotentiary. 3. Any appointed or official messenger or agent. am'ber¹, n. 1. A fossilized vegetable resin, used in pharmacy and the arts; succinite. Amber is a hard, brittle, translucent substance, of a clear yellowish-brown or light-yellow color, found in small masses in various parts of the world, especially on the shores of the Baltic. It is used in making a volatile medicinal oil, in preparing varnishes, and for jewelry, small ornaments, mouthpieces, etc. It sometimes entombs insects and plants. It is easily electrified by friction, and this property, early noticed by the Greeks, was the first electrical phenomenon to be observed. See ELECTRICITY; ELECTRUM.

am'ber-gris, 1 am'bər-grıs; 2 ăm'ber-grĭs, n. A waxy concretion formed in the intestine of the sperm-whale.

It is found sometimes in the whale, but chiefly on the surface of those seas inhabited by whales, or cast upon the shore in masses sometimes over 200 pounds in weight. It is opaque, inflammable, volatilizable, and usually of a grayish color often streaked with brown, white, or gray. It is thought to be derived from the fatty matter of cephalopods eaten by the whale. It is employed largely in perfumery, and formerly was used also in cookery.

LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. i, p. 261. [A. 1886.]

3. An object of ambitious effort or purpose; as, his chief ambition was the recovery of the ancestral estates. 4. [Southern U. S.] Active malice or ill will; also, hatred. 5. Rom. Antiq. A canvassing for an office or the like; a lawful going about to solicit votes. Compare AMBITUS. [F., < L. ambitio(n-), < ambio; see AMBIENT.]

Syn.: aspiration, emulation. Aspiration is the desire for excellence, pure and simple. Ambition, literally a going around to solicit votes, has primary reference to the award or approval of others. The prizes of aspiration are virtue, nobility, skill, or other high qualities. The prizes of ambition are advancement, fame, honor, and the like. There is a noble and wise or an ignoble, selfish, and harmful ambition. Emulation is not so much to win any excellence or success for itself as to equal or surpass other persons. There is such a thing as a noble emulation, when those we would equal or surpass are noble and the means we would use worthy. But, at the highest, emulation is inferior as a motive to aspiration, which seeks the high quality or character for its own sake, not with reference to another. See AIM: EMULATION.— Ant.: contentment, humility, indifference.— Prep.: of.— am-bi'tion-ist, n. One who is actuated mainly by ambition.— am-bi'tion-less, a.

am-bi'tious, 1 am-bish'us; 2 ăm-bĭsh'ŭs, a. 1. Actuated by ambition, in the good or bad sense; eagerly desirous and aspiring; wide-awake and energetic; as, an ambitious politician or student; ambitious of applause.

He who is ambitious of things afar and uncertain, passes at once into the Poet-land of Imagination.
BULWER-LYTTON Harold p. 172. [H. & S. 1850.]

2. Characterized by or evincing ambition; as, ambitious schemes; ambitious self-seeking.

'Paradise Lost' has sometimes been called the most perfect of human productions—it ought to be called the most ambitious.
G. GILFILLAN Modern Lit. Milton second series, p. 29. [A. 1850.]

3. Betraying a desire for distinction and admiration (often with a sense of unsuccessful effort); pretentious; showy; as, an ambitious style; an ambitious equipage. 4. [Southern U. S.] Filled with rage; angry. 5. [Western U. S.] High-spirited or fiery, as a horse.— Prep.: of; formerly for or after.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

am'bit-ty, 1 am'bi-ti; 2 ăm'bi-ty, a. Glass-making. Devitrified in the pot while being worked.

am'bi-tus, 1 am'bi-tus; 2 ăm'bi-tŭs, n. [AM'BI-TUS, pl.] [L.] 1. The outer rim; circumference or border, as of a flower-head, etc. 2. An open space about a building or a tomb. 3. Logic. Extension. 4. Rom. Antiq. A canvassing for votes by unlawful means, as bribery and threats. Compare AMBITION, 5. 5. In Gregorian music, the compass or range of the notes of a melody.

Am-blan', 1 am-blān'; 2 ăm-blăn', n. A town in Negros, P. I.

am'ble, { 1 am'bl; 2 ăm'bl, vi. [AM'BLED, AM'BLD†; AM'- am'bl†, { BLING.] 1. To move with an amble. See AMBLE, n. 2. Hence, to move, ride, or walk at an easy, careless pace, or with swaying from side to side. [< F. ambler, < L. ambulo, walk.]— am'bler†, n. One that ambles, especially an ambling horse.— am'bling. I. pa. Moving in an amble. II†. n. Motion in an amble.— am'bling-ly, adv.

am'ble, n. 1. A method of progressive motion in quadrupeds, with the same sequence of foot-fallings as in the walk (see WALK), but in which a hind foot or a fore foot is lifted from the ground before its fellow hind foot or fellow fore foot is placed thereon, the support of the body devolving alternately upon one foot and upon two feet, the single foot being alternately a fore foot and a hind foot, and the intermedial supports the diagonals and laterals. See plate at MOVEMENT. 2. A movement like the amble of a horse. The amble is natural to the elephant, and in some countries to the horse, the mule, and the ass. The sequence of foot-fallings is the right hind, the right fore, the left hind, the left fore, beginning again with the right hind foot. At no time during the stride is the body of the animal unsupported. The amble has been erroneously confused with the rack or pace: it is the most gentle and agreeable to the rider of all methods of locomotion of the horse, whereas the rack is probably the most disagreeable and ungraceful.

The gray mare . . . breaking from her sober amble into a gentle trot. DICKENS Barnaby Rudge pt. i, ch. 14, p. 167. [H. & H. 1871.]

The amble and the walk are the only regular progressive movements of the horse wherein the body is never without the support of one or more legs; in all others the weight is entirely off the ground for a longer or shorter period. Syn.: advance, ameliorate, better, cleanse, correct, emend, improve, make better, meliorate, mend, mitigate, purify, rectify, reform, repair. To amend always refers to that which at some point falls short of a standard of excellence. Advance, better, and improve may refer either to what is quite imperfect or to what has reached a high degree of excellence; we advance the kingdom of God, improve the minds of our children, better the morals of the people. But for matters below the point of ordinary approval we seldom use these words; we do not speak of bettering a wretched alley, or improving a foul sewer. There we use cleanse, purify, or similar words. We correct evils, reform abuses, rectify incidental conditions of evil or error; we ameliorate poverty and misery, which we can not wholly remove. We mend a tool, repair a building, correct proof, emend a defective or faulty text. We amend character or conduct that is faulty, or a statement or law that is defective. See ALLEVIATE; EMEND. — Ant.: aggravate, blemish, corrupt, debase, depress, deteriorate, harm, impair, injure, mar, spoil, tarnish, vitiate.

a"mende', 1 ə'mānd' or ə-mend'; 2 ä'mānd' or a-mĕnd', n. [F.] A reparation or recantation; formerly, a pecuniary fine or penalty. — amende honorable, a reparation or recantation publicly or openly made to an injured person. It formerly consisted of a public avowal of guilt, and was inflicted en traitors, forgers, and fraudulent bankrupts; the simple amende honorable was made before the judges in court; the amende honorable in figuris was made in the public square, before the populace, the guilty person being robed in white, with bare feet and head, and bearing a lighted candle in his hand and an inscription on his breast. This punishment formed part of the Roman, French, and Dutch systems; it was abolished in France in 1791, revived in 1825, and once more suppressed in 1830, but continued in the form of a reparation until abolished in 1894. The word continues to be used in the Roman Catholic Church to denote prayers of reparation for sacrilege.

Amende honorable, in France, was a degrading punishment inflicted on traitors, . . . who were brought into court with a rope round their neck, and made to beg pardon.

A-mer'i-can, n. 1. (1) A native or legally constituted citizen of the United States. (2) [Recent.] The English language as used in the United States: sometimes humorously. See AMERICANISM. 2. Any native or inhabitant of the American continent, whether aboriginal or descended from European settlers. 3. One of the aborigines of the American continent. 4. pl. [Eng.] American stocks and bonds of every class.

A-mer"i-ca'na, 1 ə-mer'ɪ-kē', -kä', or -kan'ə; 2 ə-mĕr'ɪ-kā', -kä', or -kăn'ə, n. pl. Things American, collectively; any collection of American literary papers, sayings, fragments, scraps of information, etc. See ANA[1].

American E. F., abbr. American Expeditionary Force.

A-mer'i-can Fork Cit'y. A city in Utah county, Utah.

A-mer'i-can-ism, 1 ə-mer'ɪ-kən-izm; 2 ə-mĕr'ɪ-kan-ĭsm, n. 1. A word or phrase peculiar to the people of the United States, or to some of them; also, a peculiar sense in which an English word or phrase is used in the United States.

Americanisms are derived, it is scarcely needful to say, from a variety of sources — from the language of the Red Man, from European immigrants of all nations, from the 'Heathen Chinee,' and from the negro. It is curious, too, to note how the words and terms which have passed out of use in England, but are preserved in our olden literature, are employed in the common talk of the American people. Littell's Living Age [Boston] Aug. 17, 1872, p. 447.

2. Any usage, trait, idea, or the like, peculiar to the people of the United States. 3. American citizenship; also, attachment to American institutions and customs.

In the following list of Americanisms only terms that have had wide circulation are included. For the nicknames of States, see under appropriate word.

TRENCH Select Glossary p. 6. [E. P. & CO. 1890.]

[F., < L. amicabilis; see AMICABLE.] a'my-a-blet.

Syn.: agreeable, attractive, benignant, charming, engaging, gentle, good-natured, kind, lovable, lovely, loving, pleasant, pleasing, sweet, winning, winsome. Amiable combines the senses of lovable or lovely and loving; the amiable character has ready affection and kindliness for others, with the qualities that are adapted to win their love; amiable is a higher and stronger word than good-natured or agreeable. Lovely is often applied to externals; as, a lovely face. Amiable denotes a disposition desirous to cheer, please, and make happy. A selfish man of the world may have the art to be agreeable; a handsome, brilliant, and witty person may be charming or attractive, while by no means amiable. The engaging, winning, and winsome add to amiability something of beauty, accomplishments, and grace. The benignant are calmly kind, as from a height and a distance. Kind, good-natured people may be coarse and rude, and so fail to be agreeable or pleasing; the really amiable are likely to avoid such faults by their earnest desire to please. The good-natured have an easy disposition to get along comfortably with every one in all circumstances. A sweet disposition is very sure to be amiable, the loving heart bringing out all that is lovable and lovely in character.—Ant.: abominable, churlish, cruel, disagreeable, hateful, ill-conditioned, ill-tempered, unamiable, unlovely.

[ME. amidde, < AS. on middan; on, in; middan, dat. of midde, < mid; see MID.]

Syn.: amidst, among, amongst, between, betwixt, in the midst of. Amid or amidst denotes surrounded by; among or amongst, mingled with. Between (or, in old or poetic style, betwixt) is said of two persons or objects, or of two groups of persons or objects. "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen," Gen. xiii, 9; the reference being to two bodies of herdmen. Amid denotes mere position; among, some active relation, as of companionship, hostility, etc. Lowell's "Among my Books" regards the books as companions; amid my books would suggest packing, storing, or some other incidental circumstance. We say among friends, or among enemies, amidst the woods, amid the shadows. In the midst of may have merely the local meaning; as, I found myself in the midst of a crowd; or it may express even closer association than among; as, "I found myself in the midst of friends" suggests their pressing up on every side, oneself the central object; so, "where two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst of them," Matt. xviii, 20; in which case it would be feebler to say "among them," impossible to say "amid them," not so well to say "amidst them."— Ant.: afar, away, beyond, outside, without.

Chem.* An azobenzol ($C_6H_5N=NC_6H_5$), into which the amido group has been introduced ($C_6H_5N=NC_6H_4.NH_2$). am"in-o-az"o-ben'zol†.

a-mid'o-gen, 1 ə-mid'o-jen; 2 a-mĭd'o-ğĕn, n. Chem. A hypothetical radical (NH_2), not yet isolated, but known from its existence in various organic compounds. [< AMIDO- + -GEN.]

am'i-dol, 1 am'ı-dōl or -dol; 2 ăm'i-dōl or -dŏl, n. Chem. A white crystalline powder ($C_6H_3(NH_2)_2OH$) used in photography as a developer for bromid plates. [< AMID + -OL.]

a-mid'o-plast, 1 ə-mid'o-plast; 2 a-mĭd'o-plăst, n. Bot. Same as LEUCOPLASTID. [< amid- (see AMIDIN[2]) + Gr. plassō, form.] a-mid"o-plas'tid†.

am"i-do-thi"o-lac'tic, 1 am'ı-do-thai'o-lak'tık; 2 ăm'i-do-thī'o-lăc'tic, a. Chem. Designating a derivative of lactic acid into which have been introduced the radicals NH_2 and SH.

am"i-dox'im, } 1 am'ı-deks'ım, -im or -ım; 2 am'i-dŏks'- am"i-dox'ime, } im, -im or -ĭm, n. Chem. A compound in which a hydrogen of the amido or imido group is substituted for hydroxyl, as $aceta midoxim (CH_3C(NOH)NH_2)$. [< AMIDE + OXIME.]

am"i-dox'yl, 1 am'ı-deks'ıl; 2 ăm'i-dŏks'yl, n. Chem. The univalent radical NHOH.

a-mid'ships, 1 ə-mid'ships; 2 a-mĭd'shĭps, adv. 1. In the middle part, as of a ship; half-way between stem and stern; as, she parted amidships. 2. On the fore-and-aft line; as, to put the helm amidships.

a-midst', 1 ə-midst'; 2 a-mĭdst', prep. In the center of; surrounded by; among; in the progress of; amid; as, amidst flying bullets; moving amidst the throng. The recent tendency seems to be to distinguish amidst from amid by using it especially of scattered things or of something moving in the midst of other things.

Ignobly safe amidst the conquering bands.
FELICIA D. HEMANS Wife of Asdrubal st. 2.

Syn.: see AMID.

a-mid'u-lin, 1 ə-mid'yu-lin; 2 a-mĭd'yu-lĭn, n. A starch made soluble by heating. [< F. amidon; see AMIDIN[2].]

a-mid'ward†, adv. & prep. Toward the middle (of).

A. M. I. E. E., abbr. Associate Member of the Institute of Electrical Engineers.

Am'i-ens, 1 am'ı-enz or (F.) a"mi"ăn'; 2 ăm'i-ĕnz or (F.) ä"mi"ăn', n. A manufacturing city, the capital of Somme department, France, with a cathedral, built 1220; captured by Spain March 11, 1597; retaken by the French Sept. 25; the scene of a treaty of peace between Great Britain, Holland, France, and Spain, March 27, 1802, and of the defeat of the French, Nov. 27, 1870. Am'mon‡, 1 am'an; 2 ăm'on, n. 1. The Egyptian sun-god Amen: so called by the Greeks and Romans. He was identified in the Great Oasis (El-Khargeh) with Kueph or Khnum, to whom the ram was sacred and who was worshiped there as Amen-Khnum under the form of a man with the head of a ram. The Egyptian divinity had a human head; when fused with Ra, the head of a hawk. See RA. The Greek and Roman Zeus-Ammon or Jupiter-Ammon had a ram's head, oftener the ram's horns. 2. [a-] The argali, formerly Ovis ammon.

Am'mon‡, n. pl. Bib. A people descended from Ben Ammi, the son of Lot. Am'mon-ites‡.

Am'mon‡, 1 ă'mŏn; 2 ă'mŏn, n. 1. Christoph Friedrich von (1/11 1766–5/21 1850), a German Protestant theologian, an early teacher of rationalism. 2. Otto (12/7 1842–), a German anthropologist who formulated a law embodying his theory that the Teutonic people prefer town to country life.

Am"mo-ne'a, 1 am'o-ni'a; 2 ăm'o-nē'a, n. pl. Conch. An extinct order or suborder of cephalopods having a chambered shell of various forms, with an aperture closed by one or two operculiform pieces. [< L. Ammon; cp. AMMONITE‡.] Am"mo-nol'de-a‡.—am"mo-ne'an, a. & n.

Am'mo-nal, 1 am'o-nal; 2 ăm'o-năl, n. Bib. (Douai).

am-mo'ni-a, 1 a-mō'ni-a; 2 ă-mō'ni-a, n. 1. A solution of gaseous anhydrous ammonia (see def. 2) in water; spirits of hartshorn. According to the United States Pharmacopœia, ordinary water of ammonia should contain 10 per cent. by weight of the gas, and the "stronger water of ammonia" 28 per cent. liquid ammonia‡; water of ammonia‡.

2. A colorless pungent suffocating gas (NH_3) found in small quantities in the air and in mineral waters, and obtained chiefly by the dry distillation of nitrogenous organic bodies, as bones, blood, coal, etc. It is very soluble in water, liquefiable and solidifiable by cold and pressure, and strongly alkaline, combining with acids to form ammonium salts. It is used for artificial refrigeration (see illus. of ICE-MACHINE) and for motors. It is of great value as a fertilizer, principally in the form of ammonium sulfate; it is also largely employed in the arts and in medicine.

Ammonia was known to the early alchemists in the form of the carbonate under the name of spiritus salis urinæ. In the fifteenth century Basil Valentine showed that the same body may be obtained by the action of an alkali upon sal-ammoniac; and Glauberi, in consequence, termed this body spiritus volatilis salis armoniaci.

[< AMMONIAC, n.]—albuminoid ammonia, ammonia, generated by the dissolution of organic material, when potassium permanganate in alkaline solution is distilled with sewage, water, etc.—am-mo'ni-a-al"um, n. Same as TSCHERMIGITE.—a.-condenser, n. A spiral of pipe equipped for receiving ammonia-gas hot from a compressor, and cooling and condensing it to a liquid that by its future expansion will freeze water into artificial ice, or refrigerate a cold-storage plant. See ICE-MACHINE, under ICE. a.-coil‡.—a. type (Chem.), designating certain triad forms as exemplified in ammonias, phosphins, etc.

am-mo'ni-ac, 1 a-mō'ni-ak; 2 ă-mō'ni-ăc, a. Of, pertaining to, or like ammonia; ammoniacal.

am-mo'ni-ac, n. 1. Gum ammoniac.

Ammoniac is described by Pliny as "a resinous gum said to distil from a tree near the Temple of Jupiter Ammon." This vague indication points in all probability to the fact that the Dorema ammoniacum was grown in the botanical garden which was attached to the great Temple of Amen at Thebes. AMELIA B. Its abundant milky juice yields the drug ammoniacum.

am"mo-ni'a-cal, 1 am'o-nai'a-kal; 2 ăm'o-ni'a-cal, a. Chem. Of, resembling, containing, or using ammonia; as, an ammoniacal odor: an ammoniacal engine.—ammoniacal liquor, the solution of ammonium salts obtained in distilling coal, as for the manufacture of gas.—a. salt, a salt formed by the direct union of ammonia and an acid, without elimination of hydrogen.

Am-mo'ni-an‡, 1 a-mō'ni-an; 2 ă-mō'ni-an, a. Of or pertaining to Ammonius, especially (1) Ammonius Saccas, a Neo-Platonic philosopher of Alexandria, Egypt (2d and 3d centuries), or (2) Ammonius of Alexandria, a Christian philosopher (3d or 4th century).—Ammonian sections, sections into which Ammonius of Alexandria divided the Gospels.

Am-mo'ni-an‡, a. Of or pertaining to the Egyptian god of life, Ammon, or his oracular temple in Libya.

am-mo'ni-a-phone, 1 a-mō'ni-a-fōn; 2 ă-mō'ni-a-fōn, n. A device for inhaling ammonia as a stimulant to the voice. [< AMMONIA + PHONE.]

am-mo'ni-ate, 1 a-mō'ni-ēt; 2 ă-mō'ni-āt, n 1. Any organic nitrogenous matter used in the manufacture of fertilizers as a source of ammonia. 2†. Chem. A compound of ammonia and a metallic oxid; an ammoniuret.—am-mo'ni-at"ed, a. Chem. Saturated or combined with ammonia.—ammoniated mercury, same as WHITE PRECIPITATE.

am-mo'ni-at"er, 1 a-mō'ni-ēt-ər; 2 a-mō'ni-āt-er, n. A constituent of a fertilizing compound which yields ammonia when mixed with the soil.

am-mon'ic, 1 a-men'ik; 2 ă-mŏn'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or derived from ammonium or ammonia. am-mon'i-cal‡.

am-mo"ni-e'mi-a, 1 a-mō"ni-i'mi-ə; 2 ă-mō"ni-ē'mi-a, n. Pathol. A morbid condition in which the blood is poisoned by ammonium carbonate derived from decomposition of retained urea. [< AMMONIUM + Gr. haima, blood.] am-mo"ni-æ'mi-a‡.

am-mon"i-fi-ca'tion, 1 a-men'i-fi-kē'shən; 2 ă-mŏn'i-fi-cā'shon, n. 1. The act or process of saturating with ammonia or an ammonium salt, as a soil or a fertilizer; also, the state of being so saturated. 2. The formation of ammonia, at the expense of other forms of nitrogen compounds, by the action of micro-organisms upon organic substances. [< AMMONIA + L. facio, make.]

am-mon'i-fy, 1 a-men'i-fai; 2 ă-mŏn'i-fy, rt. & ri. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] To treat with ammonia; be subjected to ammonification. [< AMMONIA + -FY.]

am-mo'ni-o-, } 1 a-mō'ni-o-, a-mō'no-; 2 ă-mō'ni-o-, am-mo'no-, } ă-mō'no-. From ammonia: combining forms used in chemistry and medicine; as, *ammonio*aluminic, containing ammonia and aluminum; *ammono*acid; *ammono*salt.

Words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

am"mo-ni'on, 1 am'o-nai'an; 2 ăm'o-ni'on, n. Chem. The ammonium ion NH_4^+. [< AMMONIUM + ION.]

am-mo"ni-o"pla-tin'ic, a. Composed of both ammonia and platinum.—ammonioplatinic chlorid, a crystalline, yellow precipitate, $(NH_4)_2PtCl_6$, used in chemical analyses to determine ammonia or nitrogen.

am'mon-ite‡, 1 am'an-ait; 2 ăm'on-it, n. Any fossil ammonean cephalopod shell. Ammonites are common in Paleozoic and Mesozoic rocks of all parts of the world, and are usually ornamented outside with ribs, knobs, spines, etc., while the under layer is pearly, as in the nautilus. Some forms are between two and three feet broad.

Ammonite (Ammonites rhotomagensis).

The word is derived from the ancient Egyptian Amen or Amon, to whom the ram was sacred. It is from the form of the ram's horns of this deity that the fossil mollusk called cornu Ammonis derives its name. See also the Greek Ammon, a form of Zeus with ram's horns, also called Jupiter-Ammon. Alexander the Great is represented on the coins of Lysimachus deified, with the horn of Ammon and diadem. AMELIA B. EDWARDS.

And on the pavement lay . . .
Huge Ammonites, and the first bones of Time.

BURNS The Kirk's Alarm st. 17.

3†. Originally, any objects, instruments, or stores, as guns, mortars, muskets, swords, bayonets, arrows, javelins, etc., directly used in war; munitions of war generally. [< F. amunition, cor. of munition (see MUNITION), prob. by mistaking la munition for l'amunition.] See MUNITION.—ammunition bread, stockings, etc. [Eng.], bread, etc., furnished to the government by contract for distribution to the soldiers.—a.-chest, n. A receptacle, as on a caisson or gun-carriage, to contain ammunition.—a. shoes, soft safety-shoes for soldiers or sailors whose duty it is to enter magazines.—fixed a., powder and projectiles combined for use, as in cartridges, etc.—metallic a., fixed ammunition in metal shells or cartridges.

am"ne-mon'ic, 1 am'ni-mon'ik; 2 ăm"ne-mŏn'ic, a. Pathol. Characterized by loss of memory; forgetful.

Am"ner-mur'gil, 1 am'ner-mûr'gil; 2 ăm"ner-mur'ġil, n. A mountain in central Asia, lat. 38° 20′ N., long. 96° 30′ E.; over 20,000 ft. high.

am-ne'si-a, 1 am-ni'si-ə or -zi-ə; 2 ăm-nē'si-a or -zhi-a, n. Pathol. Loss or impairment of memory; morbid forgetfulness; especially, inability to recall or comprehend particular words or groups of words, a special form of aphasia. [< Gr. amnēsia, < a- priv. + mnaomai, remember.] am-nes'ti-a‡.—auditory amnesia, loss of ability to understand spoken words.—am"ne'sic, a.

am-nes'tic, 1 am-nes'tik; 2 ăm-nĕs'tic, a. Causing amnesia.

am'nes-ty, 1 am'nes-ti; 2 ăm'nĕs-ty, rt. [-TIED; -TY'ING.] To grant amnesty to or for; pardon; as, to amnesty insurgents.

And so hereby all is amnestied and finished.
CARLYLE French Revolution vol. ii, p. 19. [R.]

am'nes-ty, n. [-TIES, 1 -tiz; 2 -tis, pl.] 1. An act of pardon or oblivion by which a government through its chief executive absolves a whole class or whole classes of offenders, without trial, from penalties and disabilities incurred, or pardons a whole class of offenses and all concerned therein.

To the executive alone is intrusted the power of pardon: and it is granted without limit. Pardon includes amnesty. It blots out the offense pardoned and removes its penal consequences.
U. S. Supreme Court Reports vol. xxx, p. 147.

The proclamation of the President extended unconditionally and without reservation a full pardon and amnesty for the offense of treason . . . with a restoration of all rights, privileges, and immunities under the Constitution. . . . All the benefits which can result to the claimant from both pardon and amnesty would equally have accrued to him if the term 'pardon' alone had been used in the proclamation.
U. S. Supreme Court Reports vol. xiv, pp. 152–3.

Under the régime established in 1871, the right of amnesty in France, is reserved to the national assembly.
A. HÉBRARD in Cyc. of Polit. Science vol. i, p. 89.

2. Any intentional forgetfulness or overlooking, especially of past wrong-doing or the like; as, peace should bring amnesty. [< F amneslie, < L. amnestia, < Gr. amnēstia, < a- priv. + mnaomai, remember.]

Syn.: absolution, acquittal, oblivion, pardon. Acquittal is a release from a charge, after trial, as not guilty. Pardon is a removal of penalty from one who has been adjudged guilty. Acquittal is by the decision of a court, commonly of a jury; pardon is the act of the executive. An innocent man may demand acquittal, and need not plead for pardon. Pardon supposes an offense; yet, as our laws stand, to grant a pardon is sometimes the only way to release one who has been wrongly convicted. Oblition, from the Latin, signifies overlooking an offense, so that the offender stands before the law as if it had never been committed. Amnesty brings the same idea through the Greek. Pardon affects individuals; amnesty and oblition are said of great numbers. Pardon is oftenest applied to the ordinary administration of law; amnesty, to national and military affairs. An amnesty is issued after war, insurrection, or rebellion; it is often granted by "an act of oblition," and includes a full pardon of all offenders who come within its provisions. Absolution is a religious word (compare synonyms for ABSOLVE).— Ant.: penalty, punishment, retaliation, retribution, vengeance.— Prep.: an amnesty to all the insurgents for all offenses.

High nature amorous of the good.

[OF., < LL. amorosus, < L. amo, love.]

SYN.: affectionate, amatory, ardent, devoted, fond, loving, passionate, tender. Amorous refers strictly and directly to love between the sexes; it may be used in a sensual or criminal sense, but often in a perfectly innocent and honorable one; "of temper amorous as the first of May," TENNYSON Princess can. 1, l. 2. Amatory is a kindred word, but of different usage; we may speak of the amatory looks or verses of the amorous swain. Loving and passionate are capable of a wide range, including the highest and lowest forms of attachment. Fond is commonly applied to an affection that becomes, or at least appears, excessive. Affectionate, devoted, and tender are almost always used in a high and good sense; as, an affectionate son; a devoted friend; "the tender mercy of our God," Luke i, 78. See ARDENT. — Ant.: cold, distant, forbidding, frigid, indifferent, insensible, passionless, repellent. — am'o-rous-ly, adv. — am'o-rous-ness, n. The quality of being amorous.

A-mor'pha, 1 ə-mōr'fa; 2 a-mŏr'fa, n Bot. 1. A genus of North-American shrubs of the bean family, the false indigoes or lead-plants, having odd-pinnate leaves and dense terminal spikes of violet or purple flowers with only the standard petal. 2. [a-] Any plant of this genus. [< Gr. amorphos, formless, < a- priv. + morphē, form.]

a-mor'phin-ism, 1 ə-mōr'fin-ızm; 2 a-mŏr'fin-ĭsm, n. The condition caused by depriving a person addicted to morphin of the use of the drug. [< A-, not, + MORPHINISM.]

a-mor'phism, 1 ə-mōr'fızm; 2 a-mŏr'fĭsm, n. 1. The state or quality of being amorphous; especially, absence of crystalline structure. 2. The doctrine of anarchism. a-mor'phi-at.

Amorphophallus titanum.

A-mor'pho-phal'lus, 1 ə-mōr'fo-fal'us; 2 a-mŏr'fo-făl'ŭs, n. Bot. A genus of tropical plants of the arum family. A. titanum, found in Sumatra, has the largest flower in the world, the spathe being 6 feet deep and 2½ feet in diameter. Several smaller species are ornamental greenhouse plants. [< Gr. amorphos (see AMORPHOUS) + phallos, membrum virile.]

a-mor'pho-phyte, 1 ə-mōr'fo-faıt; 2 a-mŏr'fo-fīt, n. A plant having irregular or anomalous flowers. [< Gr. amorphos (see AMORPHOUS) + phyton, plant.]

am"or-pho'tæ, 1 am"or-fō'tī; 2 ăm"ŏr-fō'tē, n. pl. Astron. Stars that do not form part of the figure of a constellation. [< Gr. amorphōtos, not formed, < a- priv. + morphē, form.]

a-mor'phous, } 1 ə-mōr'fus; 2 a-mŏr'fŭs, a-mor'fous[E], } a. 1. Without determinate shape; structureless; unshapen; unshapely; as, amorphous slag, rock, or slime. 2. Mineral. Uncrystallized.

The ice . . . reaches this place more or less amorphous.
TYNDALL Hours of Exercise p. 76. [A. 1871.]

3. Of no fixed character; anomalous; unorganized; heterogeneous. 4. Pertaining to or characterized by political amorphism; anarchic. [< Gr. amorphos, < a- priv. + morphē, form.] a-mor'phic†; a-mor'phose†. — a-mor'phous-ly, adv. — a-mor'phous-ness, n.

A-mor"pho-zo'a, 1 ə-mōr"fo-zō'ə; 2 a-mŏr"fo-zō'a, n. pl. Zool. 1. Protozoans. 2. The Porifera. [< Gr. amorphos (see AMORPHOUS) + zōon, animal.] — a-mor"pho-zo'a-ry, n. A compound amorphozoic animal. — a-mor"pho-zo'ic, a. Without definite shape; unsymmetrical; specif., of or pertaining to Amorphozoa. a-mor"pho-zo'ous†.

a-mor'phus, 1 ə-mōr'fus; 2 a-mŏr'fŭs, n. [-PHI, 1 -fai; 2 -fī, pl.] Terat. A monster without heart or definite form.

a-mor'phy, 1 ə-mōr'fı; 2 a-mŏr'fy, n. [Archaic.] The state of being amorphous; shapelessness. [< Gr. amorphia, < amorphos, amorphous.] a-mor'phi-at.

Am"or-rhe'an, 1 am"o-rī'on; 2 ăm"o-rē'an, n. Bib. (Douai).

Am'or-rhite, 1 am'o-raıt; 2 ăm'o-rīt, n. Bib. (Douai).

a-mor'row†, adv. On the morrow. a-mor'wet.

a-mort', 1 ə-mōrt'; 2 a-mŏrt', a. & adv. Without life or animation; dejected; as if dead.

She, amort, Broke with such woe as hath no help on earth.
EDWIN ARNOLD Light of the World bk. iii, p. 168. (r. & w. 1891.]

a-mor"ti-za'[or -sa']tion, 1 ə-mōr"tı-zā'shən; 2 a-mŏr"ti-zā'shon, n. Law. 1. The act of conveying lands and tenements to a corporation having perpetual succession; an alienation in mortmain. 2. The extinction or reduction of a debt through a sinking-fund.

[< F. amortir (ppr. amortissant), < L. ad, to, + mort(i)s, death.] a-mor'tise†. — a-mor'tiz-a-bl(E), a. Capable of being amortized. a-mor'tis-a-bl(E)†.

a-mor'tize-ment, 1 ə-mōr'tız-mənt or -mənt; 2 a-mŏr'tiz-ment, n. 1. Arch. The crowning or finishing portion at the top of any member or part of a structure, whether or not in itself an ornament. 2. Amortization. a-mor'tise-ment†; a-mor'tisse-ment†.

A'mo-ry, n. A town in Monroe county, Miss.

A'mo-ry, 1 ē'mo-rı; 2 ā'mo-ry, Blanche. In Thackeray's Pendennis, Lady Clavering's daughter, an affected, fascinating flirt, who jilts Arthur Pendennis for Harry Foker.

A'mos, 1 ē'mos; 2 ā'mos, n. 1. A masculine personal name. 2. Bib. A minor prophet, 8th century B. C., or his book. 3. A village in Marion county, W. Va. [Heb., a burden, or courageous and strong.]

Am'o-sa, 1 am'o-sə; 2 ăm'o-sa, n. Bib. (Douai).

a-mo'tion, 1 ə-mō'shən; 2 a-mō'shon, n. [Rare.] A removal; election; deprivation of possession or ownership; especially, the judicial removal from office of a corporation officer. [< L. amotio(n-).]

a-mo'tus, 1 ə-mō'tus; 2 a-mō'tŭs, a. [L.] [Rare.] Zool. Raised so as to clear the ground, as the hind toe of some birds.

a-mou'li, 1 ə-mū'lı; 2 a-mụ'lí, n. [Abys.] A salt brick worth from 10 to 16 cents, used as a medium of exchange.

a-mount', 1 ə-mount'; 2 a-mount', v. I. i. 1. To reach in the aggregate or amount; rise by an accumulation of particulars; as, our expenses amounted to $20.

You know how much the gross sum of deuce-ace amounts to.
SHAKESPEARE Love's Labour's Lost act i, sc. 2.

2. To reach or extend in total effect or substance; be equivalent, as in force or value; as, his flight amounts to a confession of guilt. 3†. To ascend; mount up. II†. t. 1. To raise; lift up. 2. To come to, as in quantity or effect. 3. To mount; ascend. [< OF. amounter, < amont, up-hill, < à- (< L. ad), to, + mont, < L. mon(t-)s, mountain.]

a-mount', n. 1. A sum total of numbers or quantities; specif., (1) the sum of principal and interest, or (2) the total value of an annuity; as, the amount of 5 and 6 is 11. 2. A quantity viewed as a total; aggregate; totality; as, the amount of his savings.

A thoughtless woman has power to do a vast amount of harm.
T. S. ARTHUR What can Woman Do? ch. 19, p. 177. [r. w. n. 1856.]

It is not the opinion of the absolute majority which rules, but that amount of public opinion which can be brought to bear on a particular point. WENDELL PHILLIPS Orations p. 379. [r. & s. 1884.]

3. The total effect or import; sum and substance; result; as, the amount of his statement is this.

Here, half-mad, half-fed, half-sarkit. Is a' th' amount.

SYN.: see AGGREGATE.

a-mour', 1 ə-mūr'; 2 ä-mur', n. [F.] 1. A love-affair, especially one of an illicit nature; intrigue. 2†. Love, especially for one of the opposite sex; friendship. — amour propre [F.], self-love; self-esteem.

To wound one's amour propre is — to wound his vanity.
BREWER Dict. Phrase and Fable.

— am"ou-rette', n. 1. A petty love-affair. 2. A cupid; an amoretto. 3. The quaking-grass. — am'our-ist, n. See AMORIST.

a-move'[1], 1 ə-mūv'; 2 a-mov', vt. [A-MOVED'; A-MOV'ING.] [Archaic.] To remove; especially, to remove from a position or office: now only in legal phraseology. [< L. amoveo, remove.] — a-mov'a-bl(E)†, a. [Rare.] Removable. a-mov'i-bl(E)†. — a-mov"a-bil'i-ty, n. a-mov'alt, n. Removal.

a-move'[2]†, vt. 1. To set in motion; stir up; excite to action. 2. To excite the feelings of. 3. To arouse from sleep.

a-moy'[1], 1 ə-moı'; 2 ä-móy', n. [P. I.] An odor; a smell: a Tagalog term.

A-moy'[2], n. 1. An island in Fukien province, China. 2. A treaty-port on this island.

A'moz, 1 ē'moz; 2 ā'móz, n. Bib. Isa. i, 1.

am'pac, 1 am'pak; 2 ăm'păc, n. [E. Ind.] A tall East-Indian tree (genus Xanthoxylum) yielding a fragrant resin.

am"pa-le'a, 1 ūm"pa-lē'ə; 2 ăm"pä-le'ä, n. [P. I.] Bot. The balsam-pear (Momordica charantia). am"pa-li'at.

am-pa'ro, 1 am-pā'ro; 2 ăm-pä'ro, n. (Sp.) Mex. Law. A preliminary certificate issued to the holder of a land-claim pending the issue of preemption papers.

am'pe-li-, } 1 am'pı-lı-, am'pı-lo-; 2 ăm'pe-li-, ăm'pe-lo-.
am'pe-lo-, } From Greek ampelos, vine: combining forms used chiefly in names of vine-like plants and of birds supposed to haunt vines. — Am"pe-li-da'ce-æ, n. pl. Bot. Same as VITACEÆ. Am"pe-lid'e-æ. — am-pel"i-da'ceous, am"pe-lid'e-ous, a. — Am-pel'i-dæ, n. pl. Ornith. A family of passerine birds, variously limited, but always primarily including the waxwings. Am'pe-lis, n. (t. g.) — am'pe-lid, n. — am'pe-loid, a. Am"pe-lis'ci-dæ, n. pl. Crust. A family of gammarideans with lower antennæ under the coniform head, and with very long flagellum and only simple eyes. — am"pe-lis'cid, n. — am"pe-lis'coid, a.

The Virginia Creeper (Ampelopsis quinquefolia).

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

am'pe-lite, 1 am'pı-laıt; 2 ăm'pe-lit, n. 1. Mineral. A friable black earth containing sulfur; used anciently to kill insects, as on vines. 2. Cannel-coal. [< L. ampelitis, < Gr. ampelitis, < ampelos, vine.] — am"pe-lit'ic, a.

am"pe-log'ra-phist, n. The department of botany devoted to the description of the vine. — am"pe-log'ra-phist, n.

Am‴pe-lop'sis, 1 am‴pi-lep'sis; 2 ăm‴pe-lŏp'sis, n. Bot. 1. A genus of plants of the vine family (Vitaceæ), sometimes united with the grape (Vitis), but having no disk at the base of the ovary, including the Virginia creeper (A. quinquefolia), with digitately 5- or 7-foliolate leaves, and the Japanese A. tricuspidata or Veitchii, becoming quite common in cultivation. See illus. on page 94. 2. [a-] A plant of this genus or of the allied genus Parthenocissus. See PARTHENOCISSUS.

am-per'age, 1 am-pēr'ij; 2 ăm-pēr'ăġ, n. The strength of a current in amperes, or a current considered with reference to its strength in amperes; as, the amperage of the discharge was 10; an amperage of 8 passed through his body.

am-pere'[1], 1 am-pīr' or (F.) oñ'pēr'; 2 ăm-pēr' or (F.) ăñ'pēr', n. Elec. The practical unit of electric-current strength; such a current as would be given with an electromotive force of one volt through a wire having a resistance of one ohm. It is one-tenth of the C. G. S. unit of current-strength. See UNIT. [< Ampère, French electrician.] —am-pere'-arc‴, n. Elec. A conductor bent into the circle of an arc and used as a part of the ampere-balance in measuring current.—a.-balance, n. Elec. An instrument for ascertaining the strength of an electric current by testing the attraction or repulsion of two currents that run parallel.—a.-foot, n. An ampere flowing through one foot of a conductor. A wire 20 feet long conducting a current of 6 amperes is said to have 120 ampere-feet.—a.-meter, n. An instrument for measuring in amperes the strength of an electric current; an ammeter.—a.-second, a.-minute, a.-hour, n. A quantity of electricity sufficient to furnish a current of an ampere for a second, minute, or hour: units of capacity, as of an electric-light service or storage-battery.—a.-turn, n. An ampere flowing through one turn of a coil, considered with reference to electromagnetic effect. An electromagnet with 1,000 convolutions and a current of 5 amperes would have 5,000 ampere-turns. a.-winding‡.—a.-volt, n. A watt; volt-ampere.

One Form of Ampere-meter.

Am‴père'[2], 1 ăñ'pār'; 2 ăñ'pēr', n. 1. André Marie (1/22 1775–6/11 1836), a French mathematician and physicist. He made discoveries in electromagnetism. 2. Jean Jacques Antoine (3/12 1800–3/22 1864), a French literary critic; son of André Marie.

Am-pe'ri-an, 1 am-pī'ri-ən; 2 ăm-pē'ri-an, a. Of or pertaining to the electrician Ampère or his theories. Ampe're-an‡.—Amperian currents, electric currents assumed in Ampère's theory to flow in closed circuits around the molecules of magnetic bodies. Magnetization, according to his view, does not create these currents, but simply brings them into parallelism. See under THEORY.

am‴pe-rom'e-ter, 1 am‴pi-rŏm'i-tər; 2 ăm‴pe-rŏm'e-ter, n. An ampere-meter. See AMPERE[1].

am'per-sand, 1 am'per-sand; 2 ăm'per-sănd, n. The character &; and.

> To mean my Protean Ampersand! Punch, Apr. 17, 1869, p. 153.

[< AND + L. per, by, + se, itself, + AND.] am'per-zand‡; am'pu-sand‡; am'pus-sy-sand‡.

am'per-y, 1 am'pər-i; 2 ăm'pər-y, a. [Prov. Eng.] Of or pertaining to an amper; unhealthy; decaying.

Am‴pha-can'thi-dæ, 1 am‴fə-kan'thi-dī; 2 ăm‴fa-căn'thi-dē, n. pl. Ich. The Siganidæ. Am‴pha-can'thus, n. (t. g.) [< AMPHI- + Gr. akantha, spine.]—am‴pha-can'thid, n.

am-phan'thi-um, 1 am-fan'thi-əm; 2 ăm-făn'thi-ŭm, n. Bot. Same as CLINANTHIUM.

Am‴pha-ret'i-dæ, 1 am‴fə-ret'i-dī; 2 ăm‴fa-rĕt'i-dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of limivorous worms resembling Serpulidæ, with filiform or subulate gills in 3 or 4 pairs. Am‴pha-re'te, n. (t. g.) Am‴pha-re'te-a‡.—am‴pha-re'tid, n.—am‴pha-re'toid, a.

am-phar'ky-o-chrome, 1 am-fär'ki-o-krōm; 2 ăm-fär'ky-o-crōm, n. Neurol. A nerve-cell whose body has a pale network, the nodal points of which are connected with a deeply stainable secondary network.

am‴phe-clex'is, 1 am'fi-kleks'is; 2 ăm'fe-clĕks'is, n. Sexual selection by both male and female.

am'phi-, 1 am'fi-; 2 ăm'fi-. From Greek amphi, around: prefix used chiefly in zoological and botanical terms, with the general meaning on both or all sides; around; in turn; as, *amphi*bious, *amphi*bolous, *amphi*theater.

> Words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

Am-phi'a-lus, 1 am-fai'ə-ləs; 2 ăm-fī'a-lŭs, n. In Sidney's Arcadia, the son of Cecropia and nephew of Basilius, renowned for valor and devoted to Philoclea.

Am‴phi-a-ra'us, 1 am‴fi-ə-rē'əs; 2 ăm‴fi-a-rā'ŭs, n. Gr. Myth. An Argive ruler and hero, one of the Argonauts and a leader in the Calydonian boar-hunt and the expedition of the seven against Thebes. As a chthonian god he had a temple and an oracle in Bœotia.

Am‴phi-a-rei'on, 1 am‴fi-ə-rai'ən; 2 ăm‴fi-a-ri'ŏn, n. Gr. Myth. The oracle in the temple of Amphiaraus.

am‴phi-ar-thro'di-al, a. Having the characters of an amphiarthrosis.—am‴phi-ar-thro'sis, n. [-SES, 1 -siz; 2 -sēs, pl.] 1. Anat. A joint in which bony surfaces are united by intervening fibrous or fibrocartilaginous substance so as to permit of slight movement, as in the vertebræ. See SYNARTHROSIS and DIARTHROSIS, also illus. under JOINT. 2. Echin. A loose suture in a crinoid calyx.—am'phi-as‴ter, n. 1. Biol. That stage of cell-division in which the chromatic filaments assume a radiate appearance at each end of the nuclear spindle; also, the figure so formed. See illus. under KARYOKINESIS. 2. Spong. A spicule with two whorls of spines connected by a vertical axis.

am-phib'a-lum, 1 am'fib'ə-ləm; 2 ăm'fib'a-lŭm, n. [-LA, pl.] [LL.] A vestment worn by early Gallican ecclesiastics. am-phib'a-lus‡.

Am‴phib-del'li-dæ, 1 am‴fib-del'i-dī; 2 ăm‴fib-dĕl'i-dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of digeneous trematode worms with no acetabula and with a posterior pouch. Am‴phib-del'la, n. (t. g.)—am‴phib-del'lid, n.—am‴phib-del'loid, a.

Am-phib'i-a, 1 am-fib'i-ə; 2 ăm-fĭb'i-a, n. pl. 1. Zool. Am-fib'i-a[2], ‖ (1) A class of vertebrates whose young have gills and are fish-like, and which have a skull with two occipital condyles and a parasphenoid. It includes frog-like animals, salamanders, and many extinct forms. (2)† A class including reptiles, true amphibians, and some fishes. (3)† Pinniped mammals, as seals, etc. 2. [a-] Amphibious animals generally. Compare BATRACHIA. [< Gr. amphibios, living a double life, < amphi, double, + bios, life.]—am-phib'i-an, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the amphibia or the class Amphibia; amphibious. 2†. Of double or doubtful nature. am-phib'i-al‡.—am‴phi-bich'ni-tes, n. pl. Fossil tracks of extinct amphibians or reptiles.—am-phib'i-o-lite, n. A fossil amphibian. am-phib'i-o-lith‡.—Am-phib'i-ot'i-ca, n. pl. Entom. A division of pseudoneuropters whose larvæ live in water, including May-flies, dragon-flies, etc.

am-phib'i-an, ‖ 1 am-fib'i-ən; 2 ăm-fĭb'i-an, n. One of am-fib'i-an[2], ‖ the amphibia or of the class Amphibia. am'phibe‡; am-phib'i-on‡; am-phib'i-um‡.

am-phib"l-ol'o-gy, 1 am-fib'i-ol'ə-ji; 2 ăm-fĭb'i-ŏl'o-ġy, n. The branch of zoology that treats of Amphibia; a treatise on Amphibia. See AMPHIBIA. [< Gr. amphibios (see AMPHIBIOUS) + -OLOGY.]—am-phib"l-o-log'i-cal, a.

am-phib'l-on, 1 am-fib'i-ən; 2 ăm-fĭb'i-ŏn, n. An air-plane constructed to rise from and alight on either land or water.

am-phib'i-ous, ‖ 1 am-fib'i-əs; 2 ăm-fĭb'i-ŭs, a. 1. am-fib'i-ous[2], ‖ Living both on land and in water; suited to or comprising land and water.

> Our faulty elder poets sacrificed the passion and passionate flow of poetry . . . to an amphibious something, made up, half of image, and half of abstract meaning. COLERIDGE Works, Biographia Literaria in vol. iii, p. 159. [E. 1855.]

am-phib'i-um, 1 am-fib'i-əm; 2 ăm-fĭb'i-ŭm, n. [-IA, pl.] 1. An amphibian. 2. A being capable of living in diverse elements, as the physical and moral.

am‴phi-blas'tic, 1 am'fi-blas'tik; 2 ăm'fi-blăs'tic, a. Embryol. Segmenting unequally: said of holoblastic ova.—am‴phi-blas'tu-la, n. [-LÆ, pl.] Embryol. The blastula of an amphiblastic ovum.

am'phi-bole[1], 1 am'fi-bōl; 2 ăm'fi-bōl, n. Mineral. 1. A white to gray, green, brown, black, or sometimes yellow, pink, or rose-red mineral, which is usually in part a calcium-magnesium metasilicate. Iron, manganese, sodium, potassium, and aluminum may also enter into the composition. It crystallizes in the monoclinic system, and the most important varieties are tremolite, actinolite, pargasite, and hornblende. Amphibole is found in many crystalline limestones, in granitic and schistose rocks, and sometimes in serpentine and in volcanic or igneous rocks. 2. Any one of a number of closely related species, including the above-named, resembling each other in form but differing in system of crystallization, and having closely related optical properties and similar general chemical composition. The group contains also glaucophane, riebeckite, crocidolite, arfvedsonite, and æ nigmatite. [< LL. amphibolus, < Gr. amphibolos, doubtful, < amphi, around, + ballō, throw.]—soda amphibole (Chem.), a variety of amphibole of which sodium is an essential constituent.—am‴phi-bo-lif'er-ous, a. Mineral. Containing or yielding amphibole.—am-phib'o-line, a. Mineral. Consisting of or like amphibole.—am-phib'o-lite, n. 1. Mineral. A rock consisting chiefly of amphibole. 2. Lithol. A close-grained crystalline rock, consisting chiefly of green hornblende. am-phib'o-lyte‡.—am-phib'o-loid, a. Mineral. Containing or resembling amphibole.

am'phi-bole[2], n. [Gr.] Gr. Antiq. A casting-net.

am‴phi-bo'li-a, 1 am'fi-bō'li-ə; 2 ăm'fi-bō'li-a, n. Pathol. That stage of a disease when fluctuating temperature renders favorable termination doubtful. [< L.; see AMPHIBOLY.] am-phib'o-line‡.

am‴phi-bol'ic[1], 1 am'fi-bol'ik; 2 ăm'fi-bŏl'ic, a. Of or pertaining to the mineral amphibole. am‴phi-bo-lit'ic‡.

am‴phi-bol'ic[2], a. 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of amphiboly; ambiguous; equivocal. 2. Pathol. Intermittent or variable, as in fevers at certain times. 3. Ornith. Having the faculty of either forward or retrograde motion, as the outer toe of owls and ospreys.—am‴phi-bol'i-cal‡.—am‴phi-bol'ism, n. An ambiguity.

Am‴phi-bol'i-dæ, 1 am'fi-bol'i-dī; 2 ăm'fi-bŏl'i-dē, n. pl. Conch. A family of thalassophilous gastropods with helliciform shell and operculum. Amphib'o-la, n. (t. g.) Am‴phi-bo-lo'i-dæ‡.—am-phib'o-lid, n.—am-phib'o-loid, a.

am-phib‴o-li-za'tion, 1 am-fib'ə-li-zē'shən; 2 ăm-fĭb'o-li-zā'shon, n. Geol. Metamorphic alteration of other material into amphibole.

am‴phi-bol'o-gy, 1 am'fi-bel'ə-ji; 2 ăm'fi-bŏl'o-ġy, n. [-GIES, 1 -jiz; 2 -ġiz, pl.] 1. Logic. A sentence which, altho the meaning of each separate word is plain, is ambiguous in construction.

> He hath nat well the goddes understond,
> For goddes speke in amphibologies.
> CHAUCER Troilus and Creseide bk. iv, st. 197.

2. The ambiguity resulting from such construction; amphiboly. [< LL. amphibologia, < Gr. amphibolos; see AMPHIBOLE[1] and -LOGY.]—am‴phi-bo-log'i-cal, a. Of or pertaining to amphibology; ambiguous; obscure.—am‴phi-bo-log'i-cal-ly, adv.—am‴phi-bol'o-gism, n. An ambiguous construction or phrase.

am-phib‴o-lo-sty'lous, 1 am-fib'ə-lo-stai'ləs; 2 ăm-fĭb'o-lo-stў'lŭs, a. Bot. Without an apparent style; as, amphibolostylous plants.

am-phib'o-lous, 1 am-fib'ə-ləs; 2 ăm-fĭb'o-lŭs, a. [Rare.] 1. Same as AMPHIBOLIC[2]. 2. Pathol. Spreading on both sides.

am-phib'o-ly, 1 am-fib'ə-li; 2 ăm-fĭb'o-ly, n. [-LIES, 1 -liz; 2 -liş, pl.] 1. An ambiguous construction of language; ambiguity; an amphibologism. 2. Logic. Ambiguity of meaning, caused by uncertain grammatical construction or doubtful figure of speech, but not by the doubtful meaning of the words. Compare EQUIVOCATION. [< OF. amphibolie, < L. amphibolia, < Gr. amphibolia, < amphibolos; see AMPHIBOLE[1].]

am'phi-brach, ‖ 1 am'fi-brak; 2 ăm'fi-brăc, n. Pros. am'fi-brach[2], ‖ In classic use, a three-syllable foot consisting of a long syllable between two short ones (⏑—⏑); in English, a measure consisting of an accented syllable between two unaccented ones; as, ré-trăct-ĕd.

> One syllable long, with one short at each side,
> Amphĭbrăch | chўs hăstes with | ă stătelў | stride.
> COLERIDGE Metrical Feet st. 1.

[< L. amphibrachys, < Gr. amphibrachys, < amphi, on both sides, + brachys, short.] am-phib'ra-chys‡.—am‴phi-brach'ic, a.

Am-phib'ry-a, n. pl. Bot. The Monocotyledones.—am-phib'ry-ous, a. Bot. 1. Growing by additions to all parts of the periphery. 2. Of or pertaining to the Amphibrya.—Am‴phi-car-pæ'a, n. Bot. A genus of slender twining herbs of the bean family, the hog-peanut.—am‴phi-car'pous, a. Bot. Having fruit of two kinds, either in form or in period of ripening. am‴phi-car'pic‡.—am‴phi-cen'tric, a. Anat. Having two centers: applied to those plexus of blood-vessels (rete mirabilia) that gather into a single vessel or center at each end: opposed to monocentric.—Am‴phi-che-lyd'i-a, n. pl. Herp. A suborder or superfamily of tortoises with mesoplastral bones and an intergular shield, and with the pelvis not ankylosed: including only the extinct Pleurosternidæ.—am‴phi-che-lyd'i-an, a. & n.—am‴phi-chil'ral, a. Having the right and left sides alike in figure and dimensions, as the front of a building. am‴phi-chei'ral‡.—am‴phi-chro'ic, a. Having two opposite actions on chemical-test colors. am‴phi-cro-it'ic‡.—am‴phi-chro-mat'ic, a. Chem. Amphichroic.—Am‴phi-cœ'li-a, n. pl. Herp. An extinct suborder of crocodilians with amphicœlous vertebræ.—am‴phi-cœ'li-an, a.—am‴phi-cœ'lous, a. Zool. Concave at both ends; biconcave, as the vertebræ of fishes and of certain extinct reptiles and birds.—am'phi-comet, n. A rough figured stone with small eminences, formerly used in divination.—Am‴phi-con'dy-la, n. pl. Zool. The mammals as a superclass of vertebrates.—am‴phi-con-dyl'i-an, a.—am‴phi-cra'ni-a, n. Pathol. Headache affecting both sides.—am‴phi-cre-at'i-nin, n. Chem. A leucomain or weak alkaloid obtained in small quantity from the muscles or from muscular tissue. Compare CREATIN and CREATININ.—Am‴phic-ten'i-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. The Pectinatellidæ. Am-phic'te-ne, n. (t. g.) Am-phic'te-ne'a‡.—am-phic'te-nid, n.—am-phic'te-noid, a.

am-phic'ty-on, 1 am-fik'ti-ən; 2 ăm-fĭc'ty-ŏn, n. 1. A delegate to an ancient Greek amphictyonic council.

> The members [of the amphictyony] bound themselves by an oath not to destroy any city of the Amphictyons, nor cut off their streams in war or peace. Chambers's Encyc. vol. i, p. 237. [L. '01.]

2. pl. An amphictyonic council or body of delegates, especially the Delphic. [< L. amphictyones, < Gr. amphiktyones, neighbors, < amphi, around, + ktizō, people.]

am-phic'ty-on'ic, 1 am-fik'ti-on'ik; 2 ăm-fĭc'ty-ŏn'ic, a. Of or pertaining to an amphictyony or its members or delegates; as, an amphictyonic city or council. Amphictyonic is sometimes applied humorously or ironically to any body of persons conferring together, especially about trivial matters. am-phic'ty-o'ni-an‡.

> The grand Amphictyonic council of the league was held at Boston. IRVING Knickerbocker bk. v, ch. 3, p. 278. [G. P. P. 1860.]

—amphictyonic league, a confederacy, especially the very ancient one constituted for the protection of the temple of Apollo at Delphi, and for other purposes. The council of this league met semiannually alternately at Delphi and Thermopylæ. Every "tribe" represented had two votes, but could send more than two delegates.

am-phic'ty-o-ny, 1 am-fik'ti-o-ni; 2 ăm-fĭc'ty-o-ny, n. [-NIES, 1 -niz; 2 -niş, pl.] A league of ancient Greek peoples or cities for the enforcement of mutual obligations and the guardianship of common interests.

Am-phic'y-on, n. 1. Mam. A genus typical of Amphicyonidæ. 2. [a-] A fossil carnivore of this genus.—Am-phic'y-on'i-dæ, n. pl. Mam. A Tertiary family of carnivores with doglike teeth and plantigrade 5-toed feet. Am-phic'y-on'i-da‡.—am-phic'y-o-nid, n.—am-phic'y-o-noid, a.—am‴phi-cyr'tous, a. Unequally convex on opposite sides; like the moon when gibbous. am‴phi-cur'tous‡.—am‴phi-cyt'u-la, n. Embryol. The parent-cell or cytula of an amphiblastic ovum.—am'phid, n. [Rare.] Chem. A salt consisting of an acid and a base, each containing an amphigen. am'phide‡.—am‴phi-dep'u-la, n. [-LÆ, pl.] Embryol. A characteristic phase, in dipnoans and batrachians, of the metadepula stage.—Am‴phi-des'mi-dæ, n. pl. Conch. The Semelidæ. Am‴phi-des'ma, n. (t. g.)—am‴phi-des'mid, n.—am‴phi-det'ic, a. That extends beyond and behind the beak, as the ligament of some bivalves.—am‴phi-det'i-cal-ly, adv.—am‴phi-di'ar-thro'di-al, a. Having the character of an amphidiarthrosis.—am‴phi-di'ar-thro'sis, n. [-SES, pl.] [Rare.] Anat. An articulation that may be placed under two distinct classes, as the combined hinge- and gliding-joint of the lower jaw with the skull.—am'phi-dise, n. Spong. 1. A spicule with toothed disks like cogged wheels at both ends, as in the fresh-water sponges (Spongilla). 2. A sponge-spicule with recurved rays at both ends. See illus. under SPICULE. am‴phi-dis'cus‡; am'phi-disk‡.—Am‴phi-dis-coph'o-ra, n. pl. Spong. A tribe of lyssacine sponges with amphidises in the limiting membranes.—am‴phi-dis-coph'o-ran, a. & n.—am‴phi-dro'mi-a, n. pl. A festival at the naming of a child in ancient Athens, when the friends ran with it around the hearth. "This was on the fifth day after the birth." LID. & SCOTT Lex.—am‴phi-drom'ic, am‴phi-drom'i-cal, a.—am‴phi-du'ra, n. See AMPHITHURA.

Am‴phi-gæ'a, 1 am'fi-ji'ə; 2 ăm'fi-ġē'a, n. Zoögeog. The realm embracing the temperate part of South America: so named from the mixed or ambiguous character of its fauna. [< AMPHI- + Gr. gaia, gē, earth.]—am‴phi-ge'an, a. 1. [A-] Zoögeog. Of or pertaining to Amphigæa. 2. Extending around the globe in nearly the same latitude: specifically said of genera or species of plants. Am‴phi-gæ'an‡.

am'phi-gam, n. Bot. A lower cryptogam; a thallophyte.—am-phig'a-mous, a.—am'phi-gas‴ter, n. [-TERS or -TRI-A, pl.] Bot. One of the small appressed scale-like leaves on the under side of the stems of certain scale-mosses.

> This . . . order Jungermanniaceæ with . . . the amphigastres smaller and adpressed to the under side. BENNETT AND MURRAY Cryptogamic Botany p. 160. [L. G. & CO. 1889.]

am‴phi-gas'tri-um‡.—am‴phi-gas'tru-la, n. Embryol. The gastrula of an amphiblastic ovum.

am'phi-gen, 1 am'fi-jen; 2 ăm'fi-ġĕn, n. 1. [Rare.] Chem. An element, as oxygen or sulfur, that combines with metals to form either acids or bases. 2. Bot. A thallophyte. [< AMPHI- + -GEN.] [as LEUCITE.

am'phi-gene, 1 am'fi-jin; 2 ăm'fi-ġēn, n. Mineral. Same am‴phi-gen'e-sis, 1 am'fi-jen'i-sis; 2 ăm'fi-ġĕn'e-sis, n. Biol. Amphigony. [< AMPHI- + GENESIS.]

am‴phi-gen'ic, 1 am'fi-jen'ik; 2 ăm'fi-ġĕn'ic, a. Petrog. Having both organic and inorganic origin, as some deep-sea sedimentary rocks. am‴pho-gen'ic‡.

am-phig'e-nite, 1 am-fij'i-nait; 2 ăm-fĭġ'e-nit, n. Petrol. Basaltic lava containing amphigene or leucite; leucite tephrite: an old name. [< Gr. amphigenēs; see AMPHI-, GENE.]

am-phig'e-nous, 1 am-fij'i-nəs; 2 ăm-fĭġ'e-nŭs, a. 1. Bot. (1) Growing equally in every direction. (2) Growing on any part: said of certain parasitic fungi. 2. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or having the nature of an amphigen. [< AMPHIGEN.] am-phog'e-nous‡.—amphigenous reaction, a reaction with both acid and alkaline characteristics.

Am‴phig-nath'o-don'ti-dæ, 1 am‴fig-nath'ə-don'ti-dī; 2 ăm‴fiġ-năth'o-dŏn'ti-dē, n. pl. Herp. A family of arciferous amphibians with teeth in both jaws, South-American animals like tree-frogs. Am‴phig-nath'o-don, n. (t. g.)—am‴phig-nath'o-don'tid, n.—am‴phig-nath'o-don'toid, a.

am‴phi-go'ni-um, 1 am'fi-gō'ni-əm; 2 ăm'fi-ġō'ni-ŭm, n. [-NI-A, pl.] Same as ARCHEGONIUM.

am-phig'o-nous, 1 am-fig'o-nus; 2 ăm-fĭg'o-nŭs, a. Transmitting the characteristics of both parents; of or pertaining to amphigony. [< AMPHI- + Gr. gonos, begetting offspring.] am"phi-gon'ic‡.— am-phig'o-ny, n. Biol. Reproduction by commerce of sexes. am"phi-go'ni-a‡.

am'phi-go-ry, 1 am'fi-gō-rı; 2 ăm'fi-gō-ry, n. [-RIES, 1 -rız; 2 -rĭs, pl.] A meaningless composition with a semblance of sense; a rigmarole; burlesque; nonsense-verses, etc. am'phi-gou-ri‡ [F.].— am"phi-gor'ic, a.

A kind of overgrown amphigouri, a heterogeneous combination of events. Quarterly Review i, 50, 1809. [M.]

am"phi-lep'sis, n. The process of transmitting to children and their progeny the characteristics of both mother and father.— Am"phi-lin'ı-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of tapeworms having an oval body, with a sucker at the anterior end, vesicular testes, and single ovary. Am"phi-li'na, n. (t. g.) — am-phil'ı-nid, n.— am-phil'ı-noid, a. — Am"phi-loch'ı-dæ, n. pl. Crust. A family of gammaridean amphipods with a deep, thick body, large side-plates, and biramous uropods. Am-phil'o-chus, n. (t. g.) — am-phil'o-chid, n.— am-phil'o-choid, a.— am-phil'o-gism, n. A roundabout statement or expression. am-phil'o-gy‡.

am-phim'a-cer, 1 am-fim'ə-sər (in quot. am'fı-mē"sər); 2 ăm-fĭm'a-çer, n. Pros. A foot of three syllables, the middle one short, the first and last long (— ⏑ —); as, maple-tree: the opposite of amphibrach.

First and last | being long, | middle short, | Amphimacer
Strikes his thun | dering hoofs | like a proud | high-bred Racer.
COLERIDGE Metrical Feet st. 1.

[< L. amphimacrus, < Gr. amphimakros, < amphi, on both sides, + makros, long.] am'phi-mac‡.

am"phi-mix'is, 1 am"fı-miks'ıs; 2 ăm"fi-mĭks'ĭs, n. Biol. 1. The mingling of the germ-plasma or hereditary substance of two individuals. 2. Interbreeding. [< AMPHI- + MIX[1].]

am"phi-mo-ner'u-la, n. Embryol. The monerula of an amphiblastic ovum.— Am"phi-mor'phæ, n. pl. Ornith. A division of desmognathous birds intermediate between the anserine birds and the storks, including the flamingos. — am'phi-morph, n.

am"phi-mor'phic, 1 am"fı-mōr'fık; 2 ăm"fi-môr'fĭc, a. 1. Geol. Formed by a twofold process, as serpentine and its associated rocks according to the theory of their formation through the action of mineral-bearing thermal springs upon sedimentary argillaceous deposits, during deposition. 2. Zool. Of or pertaining to the Amphimorphæ. [< AMPHI- + Gr. morphē, form.]

am"phi-mor'u-la, n. Embryol. The morula of an amphiblastic ovum.— Am"phi-neu'ra, n. pl. Zool. A group comprising Neomenia and Chætoderma considered as a phylum of worms.

Am"phi-ne'sian, 1 am"fı-nī'shən or -ʒən; 2 ăm"fi-nē'shan or -ʒhan, n. One of a racial division including Polynesians, Micronesians, and Indonesians. [< Gr. amphi, around, + nēsos, island.]

am"phi-neu'rous, a. Possessing a pair each of lateral and ventral nerve-cords, as representatives of the Amphineura. — Am"phi-nom'ı-dæ, n. pl Helminth. A family of rapacious sea-worms with arbuscular gills, and without spines or scales. Am-phin'o-me, n. (t. g.) — am-phin'o-mid, n.— am-phin'o-moid, a.— am"phi-œ'cious, a. Living in both salt and fresh water: said of fishes.

Am-phi'on[1], 1 am-fat'ən; 2 ăm-fī'on, n. Myth. A son of Jupiter and Antiope and brother of Zethus. By the music of his lyre he caused stones to move and form themselves into a wall around Thebes.— Am"phi-on'ic, a.

Am"phi-on'ı-dæ, 1 am"fı-en'ı-dı; 2 ăm"fi-ŏn'ı-dē, n. pl. Crust. A family of macrurans of uncertain relationships, resembling the zoea of phyllobranchiates, but having a sixth pair of pleopods. Am-phi'on[2], n. (t. g.) [< Gr. Amphiōn, Amphion.]—am-phi'o-nid, n.—am-phi'o-noid, a.

am"phi-ox'ı, n. Same as CIRROSTOMI.

Am"phi-ox'ı-dæ, 1 am"fı-eks'ı-dı; 2 ăm"fi-ŏks'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Ich. The Branchiostomidæ.— am"phi-ox'id, n.— am"phi-ox'oid, a. & n.

Am"phi-ox-id'ı-dæ, 1 am"fı-eks-id'ı-dı; 2 ăm"fi-ŏ̇ s-id'ĭ-dē, n. pl. A family of leptocardians including lancelets without oral branchiform appendages. Am"phi-ox'ı-des, n. (t. g.)— am"phi-ox'ı-did, a. & n.

am"phi-ox'us, 1 am"fı-eks'us; 2 ăm"fi-ŏks'ŭs, n. Ich. 1. A small fish-like vertebrate (genus Branchiostoma), about two inches long, having a body tapering at both ends. The skeleton is notochordal, and skull, brain, Amphioxus (Branchiostoma lanceolatum).

auditory, and renal organs are absent. It burrows in sand. 2. [A-] A genus typical of Amphioxidæ; Branchiostoma. [< AMPHI- + Gr. oxys, sharp.]

Even between the grand Vertebrate and Invertebrate divisions there flits a ghostlike form—the Amphioxus, half Worm, half Fish. JAS. ORTON Comparative Zoology pt. ii, ch. 21. [N. 1880.]

Am-phip'e-ras'ı-dæ, 1 am-fip'ı-ras'ı-dı; 2 ăm-fip'e-răs'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Conch. A family of marine tenioglossate gastropods with the marginal teeth widely expanded and finely pectinated, and with an involute shell like a cowry or produced at the ends. Am-phip'e-ras, n. (t. g.) — am-phip'e-rasid, n.— am-phip'e-ra-soid, a.

am"phi-pla'ty-an, a. Plane or flat at both ends, as certain vertebræ.— Am"phip-neus'ta, n. pl. Herp. The perennibranchiate amphibians.— am'phip-neust, n.— am"phip-neus'tic, a. 1. Having the hind and fore pairs of stigmata open, as the tracheal system in larval bot-flies, etc. 2. Possessing both gills and lungs, as certain amphibians.— Am"phip-noi'dæ, n. pl. A family of symbranchiate fishes with a pair of lung-like sacs behind the cranium, including the cuchia of India. Am-phip'no-us, n. (t. g.) — am-phip'noid, n.— am-phip'no-oid, a. & n.

Am-phip'o-da, 1 am-fip'o-də; 2 ăm-fip'o-da, n. pl. Crust. An order of crustaceans having usually 7 pairs of legs, the anterior directed forward and downward and the posterior backward and upward, including numerous small marine forms, as the sand-fleas, and some fresh-water and terrestrial species. [< AMPHI- + Gr. pous (pod-), foot.]— am'phi-pod, a. & n.— am-phip'o-dal, a.— am-phip'o-dan, a.— am'phi-pode, a. & n.— am"phi-pod'ı-form, a. Resembling an amphipod or beach-flea; as, an amphipodiform insect.— am-phip'o-dous, a.

Am-phip'o-lis, 1 am-fip'o-lis; 2 ăm-fip'o-lĭs, n. Bib. Acts xvii, 1.

Am"phi-por'ı-dæ, 1 am'fı-por'ı-dı; 2 ăm'fi-pŏr'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Helminth. A family of marine rhynchocœlous worms having the proboscis furnished with stylets. Am-phip'o-rus, n. (t. g.) — am-phip'o-rid, n.— am-phip'o-roid, a.

am"phi-pro'style, n. Arch. A temple or other building of the classical period having at each end a columned portico, but with no columns at the sides. am"phi-pro'stı-lar, a.— Am"phi-pyl'e-æ, n. pl. Protoz. A division of phæodarian radiolarians with openings at opposite poles of the central capsule.— am"phi-pyl'e-an, a.— am"phi-py-re'nin, n. Biol. A substance closely allied to pyrenin, constituting the nuclear membrane of certain cell-nucleoli. — Am"phi-rhi'na, n. pl. Zool. A division of vertebrates with paired nostrils, embracing all except the marsipobranchii and leptocardians. Am"phir-rhi'na‡.— am'phi-rhine, p. porches with am'phir-rhine, a.— am"phi-sar'ca, n. columns. Bot. A hard-rinded fruit succulent within and woody without, as a calabash.— Am"phi-sau'rı-dæ, n. pl. Herp. The Anchisauridæ. Am"phi-sau'rus, n. (t. g.) — am"phi-sau'rid, n.

am"phis-bæ'na, 1 am'fis-bī'nə; 2 ăm"fĭs-bē'na, n. 1. Myth. A fabulous serpent having a head at each end of the body and moving in either direction. 2. Herp. (1) [A-] A genus typical of Amphisbænidæ. (2) A snake-like lizard of this genus, having head and tail much alike. [L., < Gr. amphisbaina, < amphis, at both ends, + bainō. go.] — am"phis-bæ'nic, a. Having the character of an amphisbæna; moving in either direction. am"phis-bæ'nous‡.— Am"phis-bæ'ni-dæ, n. pl. Herp. A family of amphisbænoidean lizards of snake-like form and without limbs.— am"phis-bæ'nid, n.— am"phis-bæ'noid, a.— Am"phis-bæ-noi'de-a, n. pl. Herp. A division of lizards without a supratemporal suspensorium, with an orbitosphenoid, and with the supraoccipital gomphosis external. Am"phis-bæ'ni-a‡; Am"phis-bæ-noi'dæ‡; Am"phis-bæ-noi'dæ-a‡.— am"phis-bæ'ni-an, a. & n.— am"phis-bæ-noi'de-an, a.

am-phis'cians, 1 am-fish'ənz; 2 ăm-fish'ans, n. pl. Geog. The inhabitants of the torrid zone, whose shadows fall at one season to the north, at the other to the south. [< Gr. amphiskioi, pl. of amphiskios, throwing shadow both ways, < amphi, both, + skia, shadow.]

am-phis'ci-i, 1 am-fish'ı-ai; 2 ăm-fish'i-i, n. pl. Same as AMPHISCIANS.

Am"phi-sil'ı-dæ, n. pl. Ich. A family of marine hemibranchiate fishes with a very compressed body and with the tail bent downward and overarched by the dorsal fin. Am-phis'ı-le, n. (t. g.) — am-phis'ı-lid, n.— am-phis'ı-loid, a. & n.— am"phis-me'la, n. A two-edged knife used in surgery.— am"phi-sper'mı-um, n. Bot. A pericarp closely investing the seed and of the same form; an achenium.— am"phi-sper'mous, a.— am'phi-spore, n. Bot. A heterœcious, one-celled spore intermediate between a uredospore and a teleutospore known in a few species of rust-fungi (Uredineæ) and most common in Puccinia pruni. — Am"phi-stom'ı-dæ, n. pl. Helminth. A family of parasitic trematode worms having a sucker-like mouth at the anterior end and a ventral sucker at the posterior end. Am-phis'to-mum, n. (t. g.) — am'phi-stome, n.— am-phis'to-mid, n.— am-phis'to-moid, a.— am-phis'to-mous, a. Zool. Having a sucker-like mouth at each end of the body, as the Amphistomidæ.— am"phi-sto-mat'ic, a. — am"phi-sty'lar, a. Arch. With columns at each end or on each side.— am"phi-sty'lic, a. Having the palatoquadrate cartilage distinct from the rest of the skull, as in the heterodontoid and hexanchoid sharks.— am-phis'ty-ly, n. The state or condition of being amphistylic.— am"phi-thal'ite, *n. am'ple, } 1 am'pl; 2 ăm'pl, a. 1. Of great dimensions am'plF, } or capacity; large; extensive; spacious; capacious; as, an ample house.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain.
POPE Windsor Forest l. 159.

2. Large in amount or degree; complete; free; full; as, ample strength; the amplest liberty; ample justice.

No white men could have made more ample apologies than did the Kickapoos. IRVING Washington vol. i, p. 332. [G. P. P. 1863.]

3. Fully sufficient to meet all needs or requirements; abundant; liberal; as, ample provision; an ample supply. [F., < L. amplus, large, prob. < am-, for ambi-, around + -plus, full; cp. plenus, full.] — am'pl(e-nessF, n.

Syn.: abundant, affluent, bountiful, complete, copious, enough, full, liberal, plenteous, plentiful, sufficient. That is enough which just meets a given demand; that is ample which gives a safe, but not a large, margin beyond; that is abundant, affluent, bountiful, liberal, plentiful, which is largely in excess of manifest need. Plentiful is used of supplies, as of food, water, etc.; as, "a plentiful rain," Ps. lxviii. 9. We may also say a copious rain; but copious can be applied to thought, language, etc., where plentiful can not well be used. Affluent and liberal both apply to riches, resources; liberal, with especial reference to giving or expending. (Compare synonyms for AFFLUENCE.) Affluent may be used of thought, feeling, etc. Neither affluent, copious, nor plentiful can be used of time or space; a field is called plentiful, not with reference to its extent, but to its productiveness. Complete expresses not excess or overplus, and yet not mere sufficiency, but harmony, proportion, fitness to a design or ideal. Ample and abundant may be applied to any subject. We have time enough means that we can reach our destination without haste, but also without delay; if we have ample time, we may move leisurely, and note what is by the way; if we have abundant time, we may pause to converse with a friend, to view the scenery, or to rest when weary. See ABUNDANT; ENOUGH; LARGE.— Ant.: deficient, inadequate, insufficient, mean, miserly, narrow, niggardly, poor, scant, scanty, small, stingy.— Prep.: ample in dimensions, for the purpose.

am-plec'tant, 1 am-plek'tant; 2 ăm-plĕc'tant, a. Bot. Twining about; embracing. [< L. amplectent(-t)s, ppr. of amplector, < ambi-, around, + plecto, twine.]

Am"ple-puis', 1 aṅ"plə-pwĭ'; 2 aṅ"plə-pwĭ', n. A town in Rhône department, France.

am-plex'i-cau'date, 1 am-plĕks"ĭ-kō'dēt; 2 ăm-plĕks"ĭ-kā'dāt, a. Having the tail connected with the hind legs by a membrane, as the vespertilionine bats. [< L. amplexus (see AMPLEXICAUL) + cauda, tail.]

am-plex'i-caul, 1 am-plĕks'ĭ-kōl; 2 ăm-plĕks'ĭ-cąl, a. Bot. Clasping a stem, as the base of some leaves. [< L. amplexus, pp. of amplector (see AMPLECTANT), + caulis, stem.] am-plex"i-cau'line‡.

Amplexicaul Leaf of Elecampane.

am-plex"i-fo'li-ate, 1 am-plĕks"ĭ-fō'lĭ-ēt; 2 ăm-plĕks"ĭ-fō'lĭ-āt, a. Bot. Having amplexicaul leaves. [< L. amplexus, pp. of amplector (see AMPLECTANT), + folium, leaf.]

Am'pli-as, 1 am'plĭ-as; 2 ăm'plĭ-ăs, n. Bib. Rom. xvi, 8.

am'pli-ate, 1 am'plĭ-ēt; 2 ăm'plĭ-āt, vt. [Rare.] To make larger or more ample; amplify.

am'pli-ate, a. 1. Enlarged; dilated; in logic, enlarged by ampliation. 2. Projecting at the outer edge, as the wings of certain insects. [< L. ampliatus, pp. of amplio, increase, < amplus; see AMPLE.]

am"pli-a'tion, 1 am"plĭ-ē'shən; 2 ăm"plĭ-ā'shon, n. 1. Civ. Law. The postponement of a cause for further consideration before decision; a holding under advisement. am"pli-a'ti-o‡. 2. Logic. The enlargement of the scope of a predicate by some qualifying word, as a verbal auxiliary. 3. Pathol. Any abnormal distention of a natural cavity of the body, or dilatation of a natural channel; as, ampliation of the chest; ampliation of the soft parts of the pelvis in parturition. 4. Biol. The increase in a definite and previously limited growth, or in the number of parts of an organism. 5. [Rare.] Amplification; enlargement; extension. [< L. ampliatio(n-), < amplus; see AMPLE.]

am'pli-a-tiv(eS, 1 am'plĭ-ē-tĭv; 2 ăm'plĭ-ā-tiv, a. Tending to or of the nature of ampliation, in any sense.— ampliative judgment, a synthetic judgment, that is, one in which the predicate is not contained in the definition of the subject, and which no analysis could have discerned in it, as "man is a sinner." [(Douai).

Am"pli-a'tus, 1 am"plĭ-ē'tus; 2 ăm"plĭ-ā'tŭs, n. Bib.

amplif., abbr. Amplificative.

am"pli-fi-ca'tion, 1 am"plĭ-fĭ-kē'shən; 2 ăm"plĭ-fĭ-cā'shon, n. 1. The act or process of amplifying; elaboration, especially in rhetoric and logic. 2. That which amplifies; something added, as to a statement. 3. Micros. Enlargement of the visual area. Syn.: see INCREASE. Compare AMPLIFY.— am'pli-fi-ca"tiv(eS, a. Amplifying, or tending to amplify. am'pli-fi-ca"to-ry‡.— am'pli-fi-ca"tor, n. One who or that which amplifies.

am'pli-fi"er, 1 am'plĭ-fai"ər; 2 ăm'plĭ-fī"er, n. 1. An amplificator. 2. One who exaggerates. 3. An intermediate lens in a compound microscope for enlarging the field of vision.

am'pli-fy, 1 am'plĭ-fai; 2 ăm'plĭ-fȳ, v. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] I. t. 1. To enlarge or increase in scope, significance, or importance; expand in statement or treatment; make more explicit; add to; as, to amplify a story.

To attempt by a mere logical knowledge to amplify a science, is an absurdity. HAMILTON Logic p. 32. [G. & L. 1860.]

2. To make larger or more ample, as in extent, bulk, etc.

II. i. To add something to what has been said or written; dilate by way of expansion or fuller treatment; expatiate; as, "the speaker proceeded to amplify." [< F. amplifier, < L. amplifico, < amplus (see AMPLE) + facio, make.] am'pli-fi-cate‡.

Syn.: augment, develop, dilate, enlarge, expand, expatiate, extend, increase, unfold, widen. Amplify is now rarely used in the sense of augment, really to add substance, material, etc.; it is now almost wholly applied to discourse or writing. The chief difficulty of very young writers is to amplify, to get beyond the bare curt statement by developing, expanding, unfolding the thought. The chief difficulty of those who have more material and experience is to condense sufficiently. So in the early days of our literature amplify was used in the favorable sense; but at present this word and most kindred words are coming to share the derogatory meaning that has long attached to expatiate. We may develop a thought, expand an illustration, extend a discussion, expatiate on a hobby, dilate on something joyous or sad, enlarge a volume, unfold a scheme, widen the range of treatment.— Ant.: abbreviate, abridge, amputate, condense, curtail, cut down, epitomize, reduce, summarize, sum up.— Prep.: to amplify on or upon; amplified by illustrations.

am'pli-tude, 1 am'plĭ-tiūd; 2 ăm'plĭ-tūd, n. 1. The state or quality of being ample; greatness of extent; largeness; scope, reach, breadth, etc., as of mind or thought; fulness; as, amplitude of form; amplitude of expression.

The amplitude of his comprehension is the source of his felicity of expression. E. P. WHIPPLE Essays and Reviews, Daniel Webster in vol. i, p. 201. [H. M. & CO. 1882.]

2. Math. (1) The absolute value or modulus of an imaginary quantity. (2) The limit of integration of an elliptic integral that is expressed in trigonometrical form. 3. Astron. Angular distance on the horizon from the east or west point; the arc of the horizon between the true east and west and the center of the sun, moon, or any star at its rising or setting. The difference between true and astronomical amplitude lies in the fact that reckoning from east to west it varies with the variations of the compass and is therefore called magnetic amplitude. 4. Mil. The range of a shot, or the horizontal right line measuring the distance over which it has passed. F. Mil. Encyc. 5. Physics. The extent of the swing of a vibrating body on each side of the mean position. 6. Meteor. The extent of the variation of a meteorological element in a given time, as a day or a year; also called range. The periodic amplitude is the amplitude of a curve representing the mean march of the element for the period in question; the non-periodic amplitude is the difference between the mean of the maxima and the mean of the minima, or between the absolute maximum and the absolute minimum. [< L. amplitudo, < amplus; see AMPLE.]— am'pli-tude-com"pass, n. An azimuth-compass having its zeros at the east and west instead of at the north and south, so as to facilitate reading angles of amplitude.— magnetic a., the amplitude of a star (see def. 3) as shown by a compass-needle: differing from the true amplitude by the amount of the magnetic declination.

am'ply, 1 am'plĭ; 2 ăm'ply, adv. In an ample manner; so as to be ample; liberally; sufficiently; abundantly.

He passed several years in this pleasing amusement, and saw his care amply recompensed. JOHNSON Rambler Oct. 5, 1751.

II†. i. To muse. [< F. amuser, < à (< L. ad), at + OF. muser, stare; see MUSE, v.]

Syn.: beguile, cheer, disport, divert, enliven, entertain gratify, interest, occupy, please, recreate. We beguile a weary hour, cheer the despondent, divert the preoccupied, enliven a dull evening or company, gratify our friends' wishes, entertain, interest, please a listening audience, occupy idle time, disport ourselves when merry, recreate when worn with toil. We amuse ourselves or others with whatever pleasantly passes the time without special exertion, each according to his taste. "The emperor Domitian amused himself with killing flies; the emperor Nero diverted himself by appearing before his subjects in the characters of gladiator and charioteer; Socrates entertained himself by discoursing on the day of his execution with his friends on the immortality of the soul." CRABB English Synonymes. Amuse is now largely used for that which excites laughter or merriment; as, an amusing story.— Ant.: annoy, bore, busy, disquiet, distract, disturb, tire, weary.— Prep.: amused at his antics; amuse the children with stories; I was amused by his account; some amuse themselves in folly. Usage seems to be settling upon at and with.

3. Mus. Same as DIVERTISSEMENT. 4†. Bewilderment. [F., < amuser; see AMUSE.]

Syn.: cheer, delight, diversion, enjoyment, entertainment, frolic, fun, merriment, pastime, pleasure, recreation, sport. Amusement and pastime are nearly equivalent, the latter probably the lighter word; many slight things may be pastimes which we should hardly dignify by the name of amusements. Entertainment and recreation imply thought and mental occupation, tho in an agreeable, refreshing way; they are therefore words of a high order. Entertainment is almost exclusively mental; recreation may, and usually does, combine the mental with the physical. Sports are almost wholly on the physical plane, tho involving a certain grade of mental action; fox-hunting, horse-racing, and baseball are sports. Cheer may be very quiet, as the cheer of a bright fire to an aged traveler; merriment is with liveliness and laughter; fun and frolic are apt to be boisterous. Amusement is a form of enjoyment, but enjoyment may be too keen to be called amusement. See COMFORT.— Ant.: ennui, fatigue, labor, lassitude, toil, weariness, work.

Bot.* A small genus of North-African and Asiatic shrubs and trees of the plum family (Amygdalaceæ), by some included in Prunus, but by others set apart from it, because of the velvety or leathery flesh and the pitted or wrinkled stone of its drupe. A. persica is the peach; A. communis, the almond.

a-myg"do-phe'nin, 1 ə-mig'do-fi'nın; 2 ə-mŷg'do-fē'-nin, n. Chem. The amygdalate of phenetidin ($C_{16}H_{17}O_3N$), made from mandelic acid and para-phenetidin, and used in medicine as an analgesic and antirheumatic. [< AMYGDALA + PHENYL.]

a-myg'dule, 1 ə-mig'diūl; 2 ə-mŷg'dūl, n. Geol. A nodule in an amygdaloid. [< AMYGDALA.]—spike amygdule, a cylindrical amygdule whose longer axis is at right angles to the bedding.

am'yl, 1 am'ıl; 2 ăm'yl, n. Chem. A hypothetical monatomic alcohol radical (C_5H_{11}) existing in the free state as a double molecule, decane. [< L. amylum (< Gr. amylon, starch) + hylē, matter.] am'ulet.—amyl acetate (Chem.), a colorless transparent liquid ($C_7H_{14}O_2$) of an aromatic pear-like odor, made by treating primary iso-amyl alcohol with sulfuric and acetic acids and used in making perfumery, in the manufacture of mineral waters, sirups, etc. Eight isomeric amyl acetates are known.—a. alcohol. 1. An oily colorless liquid ($C_5H_{11}HO$) formed on the fermentation of starchy matters, as in the distillation of spirits from grain. It is the chief constituent of fusel-oil. inactive a. alcohol†. 2. Any one of eight possible theoretical isomers of the preceding, of which seven are known. See also ALCOHOL.—a. hydrid, see PENTANE.—a. nitrite, a yellowish aromatic liquid ($C_5H_{11}NO_2$) of a fruity odor, used as a remedy by inhalation in spasmodic diseases, to diminish arterial pressure.—am'yl-am'in or -ine, n. Chem. 1. A colorless liquid compound ($C_5H_{11}NH_2$), formed variously, as by the action of potash on amyl cyanate. 2. One of a series of liquid amins of the amyl radical. See AMIN.—am'y-lase, n. A ferment possessing amylolitic action; diastase.—am'y-late, n. Chem. 1. A compound in which the amyl group is combined with a basic radical. 2. A compound of starch with a basic radical.—am'y-lene, n. Chem. A colorless volatile liquid, consisting of several olefins, obtained by distilling amyl alcohol with zinc chlorid: used as an anesthetic.—a-myl'ic, a. Chem. 1. Of, pertaining to, or derived from amyl. 2. Producing amyl alcohol; as, amylic fermentation.—amylic alcohol, amyl alcohol.

am'y-la'ceous, 1 am'ı-lē'shus; 2 ăm'y-lā'shŭs, a. Of, pertaining to, or like starch; starchy. [< L. amylum, < Gr. amylon, starch, < a- priv. + mylē, mill.]—amylaceous bodies, same as AMYLOID BODIES.

am'y-lan, 1 am'ı-lan; 2 ăm'y-lăn, n. One of two compounds, either α-amylan or β-amylan, similar to dextrin, and occurring in certain grains.

am"y-lif'er-ous, 1 am'ı-lif'ər-us; 2 ăm'y-lif'er-ŭs, a. Producing starch, as in plants. [< AMYLUM + L. fero, bear.]

am'y-lin, 1 am'ı-lin; 2 ăm'y-lĭn, n. Starch-cellulose; the outer insoluble covering of starch-granules. am'y-line†.

am"y-lo-, 1 am'ı-lo-; 2 ăm'y-lo-. From Greek amylon, starch: a combining form.—am"y-lo-bac'ter, n. Biol. A bacillus (Bacillus amylobacter) which gives rise to butyric-acid fermentation in infusions. am"y-lo-bac-te'ri-um†.—am"y-lo-cel'lu-lose, n. Amylin.—am"y-lo-dex'trin or -trine, n. Chem. A crystalline body, soluble in water, obtained by the action of diastase or dilute acid on starch.—a-myl'o-gen, n. Starch-granulose or granules that are soluble in water.—am"y-lo-gen'e-sis, n. Bot. The genesis or formation of starch.—am"y-lo-gen'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or containing amylogen; forming starch. am"y-lo-plas'tic†.—am"y-lo-hy-drol'y-sis, n. Same as AMYLOLYSIS.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

am'y-loid, 1 am'ı-loid; 2 ăm'y-lŏid, a. Like or containing starch. [< AMYLUM + -OID.] am"y-loi'dal†.—amyloid bodies or corpuscles, small accretions, like starch-grains, found in the brain and spinal cord; the corpora amylacea.—a. degeneration or disease, a morbid condition in which amyloid (see AMYLOID, n., 2) is present; lardaceous or waxy degeneration, or bacony disease.

am'y-loid, n. 1. Chem. The gummy substance, isomeric with starch, formed by the action of sulfuric acid on cellulose. 2. Physiol. Chem. An albuminoidal body, developed in degenerate animal tissues. 3. Bot. A starchy substance in the cotyledons of certain plants.—am"y-loi-do'sis, n. Amyloid degeneration.—am"y-loi'y-sis, n. Chem. The conversion of starch into sugar.—am"y-lo-lyt'ic, a. Chem. Converting starch into sugar; as, the amylolytic action of saliva.

am'y-lom, 1 am'ı-lom; 2 ăm'y-lŏm, n. Soft glandular tissue which produces starch. [< AMYL.] am'y-lome†.

am"y-lom'e-ter, 1 am'ı-lom'ı-tər; 2 ăm'y-lŏm'e-ter, n. An apparatus for determining the percentage of starch in certain substances, as potatoes.

am'y-lon, 1 am'ı-lon; 2 ăm'y-lŏn, n. Chem. Same as MALTOSE. [< Gr. amylon, starch.]

am'y-lo-plast, n. Bot. A starch-forming corpuscle; a leucoplastid or amylogenic body. am"y-lo-plas'tid or -tidet, —am"y-lop'sin, n. Physiol. Chem. A ferment, contained in pancreatin, that changes starch into sugar.

am'y-lose, 1 am'ı-lōs; 2 ăm'y-lōs, n. Chem. 1. Starch ($C_6H_{10}O_5$), or one of its isomers, as dextrin, inulin, tunicin, glycogen, natural gums, or cellulose: sugar made from starch. 2. pl. These isomeric bodies considered as belonging to one of the carbohydrate groups. See CARBOHYDRATE.

an, 1 an; 2 ăn, indef. art. or a. One, or any, when not emphatic: used like the article a, but before words beginning with a vowel sound; as, an acorn; an honest man. The n of Early English an began to drop about 1150. The rule for dropping is given by More (1532), and has been repeated ever since, but not always followed. In the Bible (1611) and Shakespeare (1623) a is regular, as now, before all consonant sounds, including h and u, eu pronounced yu. In a few instances an is found in both books. In Shakespeare an usurer occurs once, a usurer five times; an hair once, a hair often; such an one occurs twice, a one always elsewhere. The form an is not used before u, eu, in Milton, Cowper, or the Revised Version, but it occurs in Pope and in other writers, even to our time. Many writers use an before an unaspirated h. [< AS. an, one, an, a (see ONE); cp. G. ein, one, an.] [of the numeral in all England.

an, 1 ən; 2 ăn, a. [Obs. or North. Eng.] One: the early form an″al-lan-to′ic, 1 an″al-an-tō′ık; 2 ăn″ăl-ăn-tō′ĭc, a. Zool. Without an allantois. [< AN-, not, + ALLANTOIC.] — An″al-lan-tol′de-a, n. pl. Zool. A division of vertebrates without an allantois, including amphibians and fish-like vertebrates.— an″al-lan-tol′de-an, a. & n.

an′a-log, 1 an′ə-leg; 2 ăn′a-lŏĝ, n. 1. An anal-an′a-logue, ogon. 2. Philol. A word in one language corresponding to one in another; an analogous term; as, "balle" in the French is the analog of "ball" in English. 3. Biol. (1) An organ analogous to one in another species or group. (2) An organism or group of organisms representative of another in a different country or epoch, or higher group.

a-nal′o-gate, 1 ə-nal′o-gēt; 2 a-năl′o-ĝāt, n. Logic. Anything characterized by an analogous term.

an″a-log′i-cal, 1 an″ə-loj′ı-kəl; 2 ăn″a-lŏĝ′i-cal, a. Of, pertaining to, containing, or involving analogy. an″a-log′ic‡.— an″a-log′i-cal-ly, adv. According to analogy; figuratively.— an″a-log′i-cal-ness, n. The quality of being analogical; fitness for illustration.

a-nal′o-gism, 1 ə-nal′o-jizm; 2 a-năl′o-ĝĭsm, n. [Archaic.] 1. Logic. An argument from cause to effect. 2. The process of reasoning from analogy. 3. Med. Diagnosis by analogy.— a-nal′o-gist, n. 1. One who looks for analogies or reasons from analogy. 2. A believer in the analogical origin and development of language.— a-nal″o-gis′tic, a. Of or pertaining to analogy or analogists.

an″a-lo′gi-um, 1 an″ə-lō′jı-um; 2 an″a-lō′ĝĭ-ŭm, n. [-GI-A, pl.] Eccl. 1. A reading-desk; an ambo. 2. An enclosure round a saint's tomb. [< Gr. analogion, < ana, up, + legō, read.] an″a-lo′gi-on‡.

a-nal′o-gize, 1 ə-nal′o-jaiz; 2 a-năl′o-ĝīz, v. [-GIZED; -GIZ′ING.] I. t. To illustrate by analogy; cause to be or appear analogous; as, to analogize two facts.

II. i. To use analogy; be analogous. a-nal′o-gise‡.

a-nal′o-gon, 1 ə-nal′o-gen; 2 a-năl′o-ĝŏn, n. [-GA, pl.] [Gr.] Anything analogous to something else.— analogon rationis (Philos.), the mental functions of animals considered as analogous to intelligence in man: used by Leibnitz and Wolff.

a-nal′o-gous, 1 ə-nal′o-gus; 2 a-năl′o-ĝŭs, a. 1. Bearing analogy or resemblance; corresponding (to some other) or resembling in certain respects, as in form, proportion, relations, etc.

A sunbeam, a landscape, the ocean, make an analogous impression on the mind. EMERSON Nat. Addr. p. 29. [H. M. & CO. 1889.]

2. Biol. Having a similar function, as the wings of birds and insects. Compare HOMOLOGOUS. 3. Logic. Homonymous for some special reason, and not by accident; as, "the mouth of a man" and "the mouth of a river" are analogous terms. 4. [Rare.] Expressing an analogy; analogical. [< L. analogus, < Gr. analogos, < ana, according to, + logos, proportion, < legō, say.] a-nal′o-gal‡. Syn.: see ALIKE.— Ant.: antilogous.— analogous pole (Crystal.), that pole of a pyroelectric crystal or other body which acquires positive electrification in a rising temperature. Compare ANTILOGOUS.— a-nal′o-gous-ly, adv.— a-nal′o-gous-ness, n. [already listed.

a-nal′o-gous, n. Railroad. Property resembling that a-nal′o-gy, 1 ə-nal′o-jı; 2 a-năl′o-ĝy, n. [-GIES, 1 -jız; 2 -ĝĭs, pl.] 1. Resemblance or similarity of properties or relations; agreement or resemblance in certain aspects, as in form or function; similarity without identity.

There is a close analogy between the way in which every individual student penetrates into Nature and the progress of science as a whole. AGASSIZ Methods of Study p. 15. [H. M. & CO. 1885.]

2. Logic. (1) Reasoning in which from certain observed and known relations or resemblances others are inferred.

Examples are founded either on resemblance of properties or on resemblance of relations. Those of the latter kind are denominated Arguments from Analogy.
DAY Art of Discourse p. 145. [S. 1867.]

(2) Reasoning that proceeds from the individual or particular to a coordinate individual or particular, thus involving both induction and deduction.

Inference by Analogy. . . . is a third form distinct from both [Deduction and Induction], though able to be reduced to a combination of the other two.

3. Math. A form of trigonometric equation; an equation between ratios; as, Napier's analogies. 4. Biol. Functional likeness; physiological similarity; as, the analogy between quadrupeds' and crabs' legs: opposed to homology. 5. Philol. Resemblance in the construction or meaning of words as constituting a reason for classifying them into new word divisions or groups; also, the method or principle in agreement with which words are changed or new words originated in harmony with existing word divisions or groups. 6. Geom. Equality of ratios; proportion. 7. [Rare.] An analog. [< F. analogie, < L. analogia, < Gr. analogia, < analogos; see ANALOGOUS.]

Syn.: affinity, coincidence, comparison, parity, proportion, relation, resemblance, similarity, similitude. Affinity is a mutual attraction with or without seeming likeness: as, the affinity of iron for oxygen. Coincidence is complete agreement in some one or more respects; there may be a coincidence in time of most dissimilar events. Parity of reasoning is said of an argument equally conclusive on subjects not strictly analogous. Similitude is a rhetorical comparison of one thing to another with which it has some points in common. Resemblance and similarity are external or superficial, and may involve no deeper relation; as, the resemblance of a cloud to a distant mountain. Analogy is a resemblance that may be reasoned from, so that from the likeness in certain respects we may infer that other and perhaps deeper relations exist.— Ant.: disagreement, disproportion, dissimilarity, incongruity, unlikeness.— Prep.: the analogy between (or of) nature and revelation; the analogy of sound to light; a family has some analogy with (or to) a state.— analogy of faith, the harmonious relations discovered or recognized among the revealed truths of religion. — convergent a. (Biol.), similarity between organs or organisms arising not from a common progenitor, but from independent variation induced by similar causes.— formal a. (Philol.), an analogy in which only the forms of words are affected. morphological a.‡.— Napier's analogies (Math.), four formulas, demonstrated by Napier, expressing the tangent of half the sum or difference of two of the angles or sides of a spherical triangle in terms of the others.

an-al′pha-bet, 1 an-al′fə-bət; 2 ăn-ăl′fa-bet. I. a. Ignorant of the alphabet; illiterate. II. n. One who is ignorant of the alphabet. an-al′pha-bet‡.

— an-al″pha-bet′ic, a. 1. Same as ANALPHABET. 2. Phon. Disregarding the sound-values of the individual letters of the alphabet. -i-cal‡.— analphabetic symbols (Phon.), signs or symbols representing the elemental parts of sounds, the sound itself being graphically expressed by grouping the symbols.

an'a-lys"a-ble, an'a-lyse, etc. See ANALYZABLE, etc.

a-nal'y-sis, 1 ə-nal'ı-sis; 2 ə-năl'y-sĭs, n. [-SES, 1 -sīz; 2 -sēz, pl.] 1. The resolution of a compound into its parts or elements; the act of ascertaining, separating, or unfolding in order the elements of a complex body, substance, or treatise: opposed to synthesis.

The analysis of style, for the purpose of systematic study, must respect the various classes of properties which by necessity or possibility belong to it. DAY Art of Discourse p. 209. [s. 1867.]

Consciousness of resemblance . . . is itself, indeed, the very precondition and the constant accompaniment of all analysis. G. T. LADD Psychol., Descriptive and Explanatory p. 293. [s. 1894.]

3. A tabular or grouped statement of the elements, parts, or heads, reached by analytic resolution, as of a subject, treatise, collection of objects, etc.; a logical synopsis. 4. Gram. The resolution of the sentence into parts, and the bringing out of their definite relations to each other and to the whole sentence. 5. Chem. The determination of the elements of a compound, the proportions of the constituents, the proportion of a special ingredient, or the presence of impurities or adulterations.

Chemical analysis is either (1) qualitative, embracing (a) the wet method and (b) the dry method called blowpiping; or (2) quantitative, embracing (a) gravimetric, which includes the wet method and the dry method called assaying; and (b) volumetric, which treats either solutions or gases (eudiometry). See phrases, also the adjectives, and METHOD.

6. Math. (1) The process of resolving a problem into its first elements. (2) That branch of mathematics which investigates the relations of variable or indeterminate quantities by means of symbols, including some branches of algebra and the infinitesimal calculus. 7. Biol. The identification of an organism by means of an analytic key (see KEY): said especially of flowers. 8. Logic. (1) In strict sense, the resolution of a concept or class into its elements; logical division; logical partition.

Physical analysis is the resolution of any physical object or substance into its parts, as a tree into trunk, branches, roots, leaves. Logical a. is the separation in thought of complex elements, as of a class or concept. It embraces division, or the separation of a genus or class into its species, and partition, or the resolution of a concept into its component attributes. See SYNTHESIS.

(2) In science and philosophy, the regressive method of investigation, said to have been invented by Plato, in which a subject or sphere of knowledge is resolved into its parts, elements, or facts, in order to arrive at the essential or ultimate elements, causes, or principle; as, the Kantian analysis.

The propædeutic or [individual] method of investigation proceeds regressively or analytically to the knowledge of real principles; the purely scientific or constructive method proceeds progressively or synthetically from principles to particulars or individuals. UEBERWEG System of Logic tr. by T. M. Lindsay, p. 542. [L. G. & CO. 1871.]

This is the fundamental procedure of philosophy, and is called by a Greek term Analysis.

HAMILTON Metaphysics lect. vi, p. 69. [G. & L. 1859.]

(3) Loosely, the inductive method; induction.

When we reason from the facts to the law, we call it analysis or induction. DONALDSON New Cratylus p. 11. [L. G. & CO. 1868.]

[LL., < Gr. analysis, < ana, back, + lyō, loose.] an'a-lyse†. SYN.: see ABRIDGMENT; ANATOMY.— analysis situs (Math.), the study of geometric configuration irrespective of its form or size, as in Euler's theorem.— blowpipe a., the process of analyzing substances by means of their blowpipe reactions.— capillary a., a chemical analysis principally employed to identify the several coloring-matters in a mixture, and founded upon the varying speeds with which different substances in solution permeate porous materials by capillary attraction.— combinatory a., the theory of permutations and combinations.— harmonic a. 1. Math. The calculus of harmonic functions. 2. Mus. The analysis of the harmonic structure of a composition.— spherical harmonic a. (Math.), the calculus of special harmonic functions having values on the surface of a sphere.— polariscopic a., analysis by means of the polariscope.— proximate a., the determination of the compounds contained in a mixture, as distinguished from ultimate analysis, which is the determination of the elements contained in a compound.— qualitative a., the process in chemistry of finding how many and what elements are present.— quantitative a., the process of finding the bulk or amount of each element present. elementary a.‡.— spectrum a., analysis by means of a spectroscope. Compare SPECTRUM. — tree'a-nal"y-sis, n. Forestry. A series of measurements and observations upon a felled tree to determine its life history. Two classes are distinguished: a stump-a. includes measurements of the diameter-growth at given periods upon the stump only, no matter what other measurements it may comprise; a section-a. includes measurements of the diameter-growth at given periods upon more than one section. When, in a stump- or section-analysis, the measurement of the diameter-growth at given periods covers only a portion of the total diameter-growth, the analysis is a partial stump-a. or a partial section-a. stem-a.‡.

an'a-lyst, 1 an'ə-list; 2 ăn'a-lĭst, n. One who analyzes or makes use of the analytical method, especially in chemistry or mathematics. [< F. analyste, < analyser; see ANALYZE.]

an"a-lyt'ic, an"a-lyt'i-cal, 1 an"ə-lit'ık, -ı-kal; 2 ăn"a-lyt'ĭc, -ĭ-cal, a. 1. Of or pertaining to analysis; proceeding by analysis, as in the separation of anything into parts or original principles; resolving into first principles: opposed to synthetic; as, an analytic experiment or investigation. 2. Specif., naming or relating to a language distinguished by analysis.

— analytical judgment, in the Kantian logic, a judgment in which the predicate adds nothing to what is essentially contained in the conception employed as the subject.

Analytical judgments (affirmative) are therefore those in which the connection of the predicate with the subject is conceived through identity. KANT Critique of Pure Reason tr. by MAX MÜLLER vol. ii, p. 1. [MACM. 1881.]

— a. language, a language that expresses the modification of word-meanings by particles, auxiliaries, etc., rather than by inflection.— a. method (Logic), the method which proceeds from known particulars to general principles: opposed to synthetic method.— a. psychology, see PSYCHOLOGY.— a. reference, in library catalogs, the registry of a part of a book, referring to the heading under which the book is entered in the catalog. an analytical‡.

an"a-lyt'i-cal, 1 an'ə-lit'ı-kal; 2 ăn'a-lĭt'ĭ-cal, n. In cataloging, an entry, not of a book as a whole, but of some section or division of that book; one of several entries analyzing a work into its parts. a. reference‡.

an"a-lyt'i-cal-ly, 1 an'ə-lit'ı-kəl-ı; 2 ăn'a-lĭt'ĭ-cal-y, adv. In the manner of analysis; by way of separating a body into its constituent parts or a subject into its principles.

an"a-lyt'ics, 1 an'ə-lit'ıks; 2 ăn'a-lĭt'ĭcs, n. 1. The science of analysis; the special branch of logic that treats of analysis; in particular, Aristotle's logical investigations and treatises.

His [Aristotle's] prior Analytics, . . . in which he develops the general forms of reasoning.

HAMILTON Logic lect. xii, p. 154. [G. & L. 1859.]

2. Math. Analysis; usually, analytical geometry.

an'a-lyze, } 1 an'ə-laiz; 2 ăn'a-līz, vt. [-LYZED; -LYZ'- an'a-lyse, } ING.] To subject to analysis of any kind; make an analysis of; examine minutely or critically; as, to analyze a chemical compound, a sentence, a plant, a logical concept, etc. See ANALYSIS.

To attempt to analyze the tone of a poem would be useless. E. P. WHIPPLE Essays and Reviews vol. i, p. 41. [O. & CO. 1870.]

[< F. analyser, < analyse, analysis, < LL. analysis; see ANALYSIS.]— an"a-lyz"[or -lys"]a-bl(e", *a. Capable of being analyzed.— an'a-lyz"[or -lys"]a-bl(e-ness", n.— an"a-ly-za'[or -sa']-tion, n. The act of analyzing; analysis.

an'a-lyz"er, 1 an'ə-laiz'er; 2 ən'a-līz'er, n. 1. One who or that which analyzes; an analyst. 2. Optics. That part of a polariscope which distinguishes the polarized light. an'a-lys"er‡.— harmonic analyzer (Math.), a mechanical device for resolving any periodic curve into its harmonic elements.

a'nam', 1 ə'nam; 2 ă'năm, n. [P. I.] An inferior timber-tree (Buchanania florida) of the family Anacardiaceæ: a Visayan term.

A-nam', 1 ə-nām' or an'am; 2 ă-năm' or ăn'ăm, n. A kingdom in Indo-China, Asia; 37,758 sq. m.; capital, Hué; a French protectorate; the central government is at Saigon, in French Cochin-China.

a"na-ma-dam', 1 ə'nə-mə-dam'; 2 ă'na-ma-dăm', n. [Tamil.] A thatched hut built of bamboo in a tree: used for watching crops against wild beasts. EDGAR THURSTON in Journal of Society of Arts Apr. 9, '09, p. 423.

A-nam'e-lech, 1 ə-nam'ı-lek; 2 a-năm'e-lĕc, n. Bib. Same as ANAMMELECH.

An"a-mese', 1 an'ə-mīs' or -mīz'; 2 ăn'a-mēs' or -mēs', n. 1. sing. & pl. A native or inhabitant of Anam; the people of Anam. 2. The language of Anam, allied to the Chinese. An"na-mese'‡.— An"a-mese', a.

The Anamese language is, like the Chinese, monosyllabic. Johnson's Univ. Cyc. vol. i, p. 140.

a-nam'e-site, 1 ə-nam'ı-sait; 2 a-năm'e-sīt, n. Lithol. A fine-grained variety of dolerite: an old name. [< Gr. anamesos, intermediate, < ana, upon, + meson, middle.] — an-am"e-sit'ic, a.

An'a-mim, 1 an'ə-mim; 2 ăn'a-mĭm, n. pl. Bib. Gen. x, 13.

An"a-mir'ta, 1 an'ə-mir'tə; 2 ăn'a-mĭr'ta, n. Bot. A very small genus of East-Indian climbing shrubs of the moonseed family (Menispermaceæ), with dioecious flowers in pendulous clusters. A. cocculus, possibly the only species, yields the berry known as cocculus indicus. See COCCULUS INDICUS; FISHBERRY. [Native.]

an"a-mir'tin, 1 an'ə-mūr'tin; 2 ăn'a-mĭr'tĭn, n. A non-poisonous, bitter, crystalline substance ($C_{19}H_{21}O_{10}$) produced from the fruit of the Anamirta. [AMESE.

An'a-mite, 1 an'ə-mait; 2 ăn'a-mīt, a. & n. Same as ANA-an"am-ne'sic, 1 an'am-nī'sık; 2 ăn'ăm-nē'sĭc, a. Endowed with a good memory.

an"am-ne'sis, 1 an'am-nī'sıs; 2 ăn'ăm-nē'sĭs, n. 1. A reproducing in memory. Specif.: (1) A figure in which matters past or overlooked are recalled. (2) Philos. Plato's doctrine of the soul's vague recollection of a previous existence. 2. Psychol. The act or process of reproduction in memory. 3. Med. The patient's account of his sickness as a basis for diagnosis. an"am-ne'si-a‡. [< Gr. anamnēsis, < ana, back, + mimnēskō, call to mind.]

an"am-nes'tic, n. 1. The art of recollection or reminiscence: Sir W. Hamilton's proposed equivalent for mnemonics. 2. Anything intended to assist or restore the memory, as certain medicines.

An-am"ni-o-na'ta, 1 an-am'nı-o-nē'tə; 2 ăn-ăm'nĭ-o-nā'ta, n. pl. Zool. Vertebrates without an amnion, as fishes and amphibians; the Anallantoidea. [< AN-, not, + AMNION.]

An-am'ni-a‡; An-am"ni-a'ta‡; An-am"ni-o'ta‡.
— an-am"ni-on'ic, a.— an-am'ni-ote. I. a. Anamniotic. II. n. One of the Anamnionata.— an-am"ni-ot'ic, a. & n.

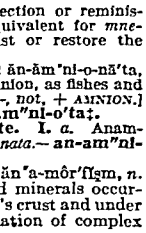
an"a-mor'phism, 1 an'ə-mēr'fizm; 2 ăn'a-môr'fĭsm, n. 1. Geol. A metamorphism of rocks and minerals occurring at considerable depths in the earth's crust and under great pressures, resulting in the formation of complex mineral compounds from those of more simple constitution. See METAMORPHISM. 2. Same as ANAMORPHOSIS.

an"a-mor'pho-scope, 1 an'ə-mēr'fo-skōp; 2 ăn'a-môr'fo-scōp, n. A vertical cylindrical mirror so placed as to produce a correct image of an object from a purposely distorted representation of it on a horizontal plane at the mirror's base. [< ANAMORPHOSIS + -SCOPE.]

an"a-mor'phose, 1 an'ə-mēr'fōs; 2 ăn'a-môr'fōs, vt. [Rare.] To represent in anamorphosis; distort in such a manner that when viewed in a certain way the picture appears regular or natural.



an"a-mor'pho-sis, 1 an'ə-mēr'fo-sis; 2 ăn'a-môr'fo-sĭs, n. 1. Optics. A distorted representation of an object, so made that when viewed through a polyhedron, or from a particular point, or reflected from a specially constructed mirror, as an anamorphoscope, a correct image of the object is obtained; also, the process of making such a representation, or that by which it is corrected. 2. Biol. A gradual change of form traceable in the history of a group of animals or plants, usually to a higher type.

Anamorphosis.

3. Bot. A distortion or anomalous growth of any plant-organ. [< Gr. anamorphōsis, < ana, anew, + morphē, form.] an"a-mor'pho-sy‡.

an"a-mor'phote, a. Producing distortion or anamorphosis.

an"a-mor'phous, 1 an'ə-mēr'fus; 2 ăn'a-môr'fŭs, a. 1. Pertaining to or characterized by anamorphosis; distorted. 2. Pertaining to anamorphism. an"a-mor'phic‡.

An"a-mo'sa, 1 an'ə-mō'sə; 2 ăn'a-mō'sa, n. A city; county-seat of Jones county, Ia.

A'nan, 1 ē'nan; 2 ā'năn, n. Bib. Neh. x, 26.

a-nan', 1 ə-nan'; 2 a-năn'. I. interj. [Prov. Eng. or Local, U. S.] Eh? what? a response to a remark not heard or understood. II†. adv. Anon.

a"na-na'plas, 1 a"nə-nā'plas; 2 ă'nă-nā'plăs, n. [P. I.] A tall Old World tropical tree (Albizzia procera) with bipinnate leaves and long terminal panicles of globular few-flowered heads of greenish-white flowers. Its wood, inferior as timber, serves for fuel and yields incense and a dye used in preparing hides for sole-leather, saddles, etc.: sometimes cultivated for ornament. an"a-na'ples‡.

a-na'nas, 1 ə-nē'nas or ə-nā'nas; 2 a-nā'nas or a-nă'nas, n. 1. [S. Am.] The pineapple or an allied fruit, as the pinguin (Bromelia pinguin). a-na'na‡.

Farewell, old Scotia's bleak domains,
Far dearer than the torrid plains
Where rich ananas blow! BURNS Farewell st. 1.

2. [A-] Bot. A genus of tropical American plants of the pineapple family (Bromeliaceæ), including the pineapple (A. sativa). An"a-nas'sa‡. [Braz., < Peru, nanas.]

An"an-chyt'i-dæ, 1 an'aŋ-kit'ı-dī; 2 ăn'ăn-cŷt'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Echin. A family of spatangoideans with an ovate or nearly cordate test, and ambulacra, in a bivium and trivium similar or slightly diverse, flush and apetalous. An"an-chy'tes, n. (t. g.) — an"an-chy'tid, n.— an"an-chy'toid, *a.

an-an'drI-ous, 1 an-an'drı-us; 2 ăn-ăn'drĭ-ŭs, a. 1. Unmarried: said of women. 2. Not virile; impotent: said of men. 3. Bot. Anandrous. [< Gr. anandros, < an- priv. + anēr (andr-), man.]

an-an'drous, 1 an-an'drus; 2 ăn-ăn'drŭs, a. 1. Bot. (1) Destitute of stamens, as a female flower. (2) Cryptogamous. 2. Anandrious. [< Gr. anandros, without a man.]

an"a-nep"I-on'ic, 1 an'ə-nep'ı-on'ık; 2 ăn'a-nĕp'ĭ-ŏn'ĭc, a. Approaching the nepionic stage.

an-an'gI-oid, 1 an-an'jı-oid; 2 ăn-ăn'ĝĭ-ŏĭd, a. Without blood-vessels: said of the disk of the retina. an-an"gI-ot'ic; an-an'gI-ous‡.

An-an"gI-ol'da, 1 an-an'jı-ol'də; 2 ăn-ăn'ĝĭ-ŏl'da, n. pl. Zool. A group of mammals comprising those with anangioid eyes.

an-an'gu-lar, 1 an-an'gıu-lər; 2 ăn-ăn'gŭ-lar, a. [Rare.] Not angular; having no angle. [< AN-, not, + ANGULAR.]

A-na'ni, 1 ə-nē'nı; 2 a-nā'nĭ, n. Bib. 1 Chron. iii, 24.

An"a-ni'a, 1 an'ə-naı'ə; 2 ăn'a-nī'a, n. Bib. (Douai).

An"a-ni'ah, 1 an'ə-naı'ə; 2 ăn'a-nī'a, n. Bib. Neh. xi, 32.

An"a-ni'as, 1 an'ə-naı'əs; 2 ăn'a-nī'as, n. 1. Bib. The husband of Sapphira, who, on being rebuked by Peter for lying, fell dead. Acts v, 1–6. 2. [Colloq.] Any liar. 3. A disciple in Damascus who was sent by a vision to restore Paul's sight. Acts ix, 10–18. 4. The high priest in Jerusalem before whom Paul was brought for trial. Acts xxiii, 2–5. 5. In Ben Jonson's comedy The Alchemist, a canting deacon sent from Amsterdam by his pastor and others to learn the whereabouts of their money. [Heb., grace of the Lord.]

A-na'nief, 1 ə-nā'nyef; 2 ă-nā'nyĕf, n. A town in Kherson, Ukraine.

A-nan'I-el, 1 ə-nan'ı-el; 2 a-năn'ĭ-ĕl, n. Bib. (Douai).

a-nal'o-gous, n. Railroad. Property resembling that a-nal'o-gy, 1 ə-nal'o-jı; 2 a-năl'o-ĝy, n. [-GIES, 1-JIZ; 2-ĝĭs, pl.] 1. Resemblance or similarity of properties or relations; agreement or resemblance in certain aspects, as in form or function; similarity without identity.

There is a close analogy between the way in which every individual student penetrates into Nature and the progress of science as a whole. AGASSIZ Methods of Study p. 15. [R. W. & CO. 1885.]

2. Logic. (1) Reasoning in which from certain observed and known relations or resemblances others are inferred.

Examples are founded either on resemblance of properties or on resemblance of relations. Those of the latter kind are denominated Arguments from Analogy. DAY Art of Discourse p. 145. [S. 1867.]

(2) Reasoning that proceeds from the individual or particular to a coordinate individual or particular, thus involving both induction and deduction.

3. Math. A form of trigonometric equation; an equation between ratios; as, Napier's analogies. 4. Biol. Functional likeness; physiological similarity; as, the analogy between quadrupeds' and crabs' legs: opposed to homology. 5. Philol. Resemblance in the construction or meaning of words as constituting a reason for classifying them into new word divisions or groups; also, the method or principle in agreement with which words are changed or new words originated in harmony with existing word divisions or groups. 6. Geom. Equality of ratios; proportion. 7. [Rare.] An analog. [< F. analogie, < L. analogia, < Gr. analogia, < analogos; see ANALOGOUS.]

Syn.: affinity, coincidence, comparison, parity, proportion, relation, resemblance, similarity, similitude. Affinity is a mutual attraction with or without seeming likeness: as, the affinity of iron for oxygen. Coincidence is complete agreement in some one or more respects; there may be a coincidence in time of most dissimilar events. Parity of reasoning is said of an argument equally conclusive on subjects not strictly analogous. Similitude is a rhetorical comparison of one thing to another with which it has some points in common. Resemblance and similarity are external or superficial, and may involve no deeper relation; as, the resemblance of a cloud to a distant mountain. Analogy is a resemblance that may be reasoned from, so that from the likeness in certain respects we may infer that other and perhaps deeper relations exist.—Ant.: disagreement, disproportion, dissimilarity, incongruity, unlikeness.—Prep.: the analogy between (or of) nature and revelation; the analogy of sound to light; a family has some analogy with (or to) a state.—analogy of faith, the harmonious relations discovered or recognized among the revealed truths of religion.—convergent a. (Biol.), similarity between organs or organisms arising not from a common progenitor, but from independent variation induced by similar causes.—formal a. (Philol.), an analogy in which only the forms of words are affected. morphological a.†.—Napier's analogies (Math.), four formulas, demonstrated by Napier, expressing the tangent of half the sum or difference of two of the angles or sides of a spherical triangle in terms of the others.

an-al'pha-bet, 1 an-al'fə-bət; 2 ăn-ăl'fa-bet. I. a. Ignorant of the alphabet; illiterate. II. n. One who is ignorant of the alphabet. an-al'pha-bete†.

—an-al"pha-bet'ic, a. 1. Same as ANALPHABET. 2. Phon. Disregarding the sound-values of the individual letters of the alphabet. -i-cal†.—analphabetic symbols (Phon.), signs or symbols representing the elemental parts of sounds, the sound itself being graphically expressed by grouping the symbols.

ăn'a-lys"a-ble, an'a-lyse, etc. See ANALYZABLE, etc.

ă-nal'y-sis, 1 ə-nal'ı-sis; 2 a-năl'y-sĭs, n. [-SES, 1 -sīz; 2 -sēs, pl.] 1. The resolution of a compound into its parts or elements; the act of ascertaining, separating, or unfolding in order the elements of a complex body, substance, or treatise: opposed to synthesis.

The analysis of style, for the purpose of systematic study, must respect the various classes of properties which by necessity or possibility belong to it. DAY Art of Discourse p. 209. [s. 1867.]

2. Psychol. That activity of intellect which, by discriminating differences and likenesses, and concentrating attention upon the latter, results in separating, more or less completely, a complex percept, or idea, into its elements.

Consciousness of resemblance . . . is itself, indeed, the very precondition and the constant accompaniment of all analysis. G. T. LADD Psychol., Descriptive and Explanatory p. 293. [s. 1894.]

3. A tabular or grouped statement of the elements, parts, or heads, reached by analytic resolution, as of a subject, treatise, collection of objects, etc.; a logical synopsis. 4. Gram. The resolution of the sentence into parts, and the bringing out of their definite relations to each other and to the whole sentence. 5. Chem. The determination of the elements of a compound, the proportions of the constituents, the proportion of a special ingredient, or the presence of impurities or adulterations.

Chemical analysis is either (1) qualitative, embracing (a) the wet method and (b) the dry method called blowpiping; or (2) quantitative, embracing (a) gravimetric, which includes the wet method and the dry method called assaying; and (b) volumetric, which treats either solutions or gases (eudiometry). See phrases, also the adjectives, and METHOD.

6. Math. (1) The process of resolving a problem into its first elements. (2) That branch of mathematics which investigates the relations of variable or indeterminate quantities by means of symbols, including some branches of algebra and the infinitesimal calculus. 7. Biol. The identification of an organism by means of an analytic key (see KEY): said especially of flowers. 8. Logic. (1) In strict sense, the resolution of a concept or class into its elements; logical division; logical partition.

Physical analysis is the resolution of any physical object or substance into its parts, as a tree into trunk, branches, roots, leaves. Logical a. is the separation in thought of complex elements, as of a class or concept. It embraces division, or the separation of a genus or class into its species, and partition, or the resolution of a concept into its component attributes. See SYNTHESIS.

This is the fundamental procedure of philosophy, and is called by a Greek term Analysis. HAMILTON Metaphysics lect. vi, p. 69. [G. & L. 1859.]

(3) Loosely, the inductive method; induction.

When we reason from the facts to the law, we call it analysis or induction. DONALDSON New Cratylus p. 11. [L. G. & CO. 1868.]

[LL., < Gr. analysis, < ana, back, + lyō, loose.] an'a-lyset. SYN.: see ABRIDGMENT; ANATOMY.— analysis situs (Math.), the study of geometric configuration irrespective of its form or size, as in Euler's theorem.— blowpipe a., the process of analyzing substances by means of their blowpipe reactions.— capillary a., a chemical analysis principally employed to identify the several coloring-matters in a mixture, and founded upon the varying speeds with which different substances in solution permeate porous materials by capillary attraction.— combinatory a., the theory of permutations and combinations.— harmonic a. 1. Math. The calculus of harmonic functions. 2. Mus. The analysis of the harmonic structure of a composition.— spherical harmonic a. (Math.), the calculus of special harmonic functions having values on the surface of a sphere.— polariscope a., analysis by means of the polariscope.— proximate a., the determination of the compounds contained in a mixture, as distinguished from ultimate analysis, which is the determination of the elements contained in a compound.— qualitative a., the process in chemistry of finding how many and what elements are present.— quantitative a., the process of finding the bulk or amount of each element present. elementary a.‡.— spectrum a., analysis by means of a spectroscope. Compare SPECTRUM. — tree'a-nal"y-sis, n. Forestry. A series of measurements and observations upon a felled tree to determine its life history. Two classes are distinguished: a stump-a. includes measurements of the diameter-growth at given periods upon the stump only, no matter what other measurements it may comprise; a section-a. includes measurements of the diameter-growth at given periods upon more than one section. When, in a stump- or section-analysis, the measurement of the diameter-growth at given periods covers only a portion of the total diameter-growth, the analysis is a partial stump-a. or a partial section-a. stem-a.‡.

an'a-lyst, 1 an'ə-list; 2 ăn'a-lĭst, n. One who analyzes or makes use of the analytical method, especially in chemistry or mathematics. [< F. analyste, < analyser; see ANALYZE.]

an"a-lyt'ic, an"a-lyt'i-cal, 1 an'ə-lit'ık, -ı-kal; 2 ăn'a-lyt'ĭc, -ĭ-cal, a. 1. Of or pertaining to analysis; proceeding by analysis, as in the separation of anything into parts or original principles; resolving into first principles: opposed to synthetic; as, an analytic experiment or investigation. 2. Specif., naming or relating to a language distinguished by analysis.

— analytical judgment, in the Kantian logic, a judgment in which the predicate adds nothing to what is essentially contained in the conception employed as the subject.

Analytical judgments (affirmative) are therefore those in which the connection of the predicate with the subject is conceived through identity. KANT Critique of Pure Reason tr. by MAX MÜLLER vol. ii, p. 1. [MACM. 1881.]

— a. language, a language that expresses the modification of word-meanings by particles, auxiliaries, etc., rather than by inflection.— a. method (Logic), the method which proceeds from known particulars to general principles: opposed to synthetic method.— a. psychology, see PSYCHOLOGY.— a. reference, in library catalogs, the registry of a part of a book, referring to the heading under which the book is entered in the catalog. an analytical‡.

an"a-lyt'i-cal, 1 an'ə-lit'ı-kal; 2 ăn'a-lĭt'ĭ-cal, n. In cataloging, an entry, not of a book as a whole, but of some section or division of that book; one of several entries analyzing a work into its parts. a. reference‡.

an"a-lyt'i-cal-ly, 1 an'ə-lit'ı-kal-ı; 2 ăn'a-lĭt'ĭ-cal-y, adv. In the manner of analysis; by way of separating a body into its constituent parts or a subject into its principles.

an"a-lyt'ics, 1 an"ə-lit'ıks; 2 ăn'a-lĭt'ĭcs, n. 1. The science of analysis; the special branch of logic that treats of analysis; in particular, Aristotle's logical investigations and treatises.

His [Aristotle's] prior Analytics, . . . in which he develops the general forms of reasoning. HAMILTON Logic lect. xii, p. 154. [G. & L. 1859.]

2. Math. Analysis; usually, analytical geometry.

an'a-lyze, } 1 an'ə-loiz; 2 ăn'a-līz, vt. [-LYZED; -LYZ"- an'a-lyse, } ING.] To subject to analysis of any kind; make an analysis of; examine minutely or critically; as, to analyze a chemical compound, a sentence, a plant, a logical concept, etc. See ANALYSIS.

To attempt to analyze the tone of a poem would be useless. E. P. WHIPPLE Essays and Reviews vol. i, p. 41. [G. & CO. 1870.]

[< F. analyser, < analyse, analysis, < LL. analysis; see ANALYSIS.]— an"a-lyz"[or -lys"]a-bl'i-ty, n.— an'a-lyz"[or -lys"]a-bl(e², a. Capable of being analyzed.— an'a-lyz"[or -lys"]a-bl(e-ness², n.— an"a-ly-za'[or -sa']tion, n. The act of analyzing; analysis.

an'a-lyz"er, 1 an'ə-laiz'er; 2 ən'a-lyz'er, n. 1. One who or that which analyzes; an analyst. 2. Optics. That part of a polariscope which distinguishes the polarized light. an'a-lys"er.— harmonic analyzer (Math.), a mechanical device for resolving any periodic curve into its harmonic elements.

a'nam¹, 1 ą'nam; 2 ą̄'năm, n. [P. I.] An inferior timber-tree (Buchanania florida) of the family Anacardiaceæ: a Visayan term.

A-nam'², 1 ə-nąm' or an'am; 2 ą̄-năm' or ăn'ăm, n. A kingdom in Indo-China, Asia; 37,758 sq. m.; capital, Hué; a French protectorate; the central government is at Saigon, in French Cochin-China.

a"na-ma-dam', 1 ą̄'nə-mə-dam'; 2 ą̄'na-ma-dăm', n. [Tamil.] A thatched hut built of bamboo in a tree: used for watching crops against wild beasts. EDGAR THURSTON in Journal of Society of Arts Apr. 9, '09, p. 423.

A-nam'e-lech, 1 ə-nam'ı-lek; 2 a-năm'e-lĕc, n. Bib. Same as ANAMMELECH.

An"a-mese', 1 an'ə-mis' or -mīz'; 2 ăn'a-mēs' or -mēs', n. 1. sing. & pl. A native or inhabitant of Anam; the people of Anam. 2. The language of Anam, allied to the Chinese. An"na-mese'‡.— An"a-mese', a.

The Anamese language is, like the Chinese, monosyllabic. Johnson's Univ. Cyc. vol. i, p. 140.

a-nam'e-site, 1 ə-nam'ı-sait; 2 a-năm'e-sĭt, n. Lithol. A fine-grained variety of dolerite: a 1 old name. [< Gr. anamesos, intermediate, < ana, upon, + meson, middle.] — an-am"e-sit'ic, a.

An'a-mim, 1 an'ə-mim; 2 ăn'a-mim, n. pl. Bib. Gen. x, 13.

An"a-mir'ta, 1 an"ə-mir'tə; 2 ăn"a-mĭr'ta, n. Bot. A very small genus of East-Indian climbing shrubs of the moon-seed family (Menispermaceæ), with dioecious flowers in pendulous clusters. A. cocculus, possibly the only species, yields the berry known as cocculus indicus. See COCCULUS INDICUS; FISHBERRY. [Native.]

an"a-mir'tin, 1 an'ə-mûr'tın; 2 ăn'a-mĭr'tĭn, n. A non-poisonous, bitter, crystalline substance ($C_{15}H_{12}O_7$) produced from the fruit of the Anamirta. [AMESE.

An'a-mite, 1 an'ə-mait; 2 ăn'a-mīt, a. & n. Same as ANAM-ESE.

A-nam'me-lech, 1 ə-nam'ı-lek; 2 a-năm'e-lĕc, n. Bib. 2 Kings xvii, 31.

an"am-ne'sic, 1 an'am-nı'sık; 2 ăn'ăm-nē'sĭc, a. Endowed with a good memory.

an"am-ne'sis, 1 an'am-nı'sıs; 2 ăn'ăm-nē'sĭs, n. 1. A reproducing in memory. Specif.: (1) A figure in which matters past or overlooked are recalled. (2) Philos. Plato's doctrine of the soul's vague recollection of a previous existence. 2. Psychol. The act or process of reproduction in memory. 3. Med. The patient's account of his sickness as a basis for diagnosis. an"am-ne'si-a‡. [< Gr. anamnēsis, < ana, back, + mimnēskō, call to mind.]

an"am-nes'tic, 1 an'am-nes'tık; 2 ăn'ăm-nĕs'tĭc, a. Pertaining to or aiding recollection.

an"am-nes'tic, n. 1. The art of recollection or reminiscence: Sir W. Hamilton's proposed equivalent for mnemonics. 2. Anything intended to assist or restore the memory, as certain medicines.

An-am"ni-o-na'ta, 1 an-am'nı-o-nē'tə; 2 ăn-ăm'nĭ-o-nā'ta, n. pl. Zool. Vertebrates without an amnion, as fishes and amphibians; the Anallantoidea. [< AN-, not, + AMNION.]

An-am'ni-at; An-am"ni-a'ta‡; An-am"ni-o'ta‡.

— an-am"ni-on'ic, a.— an-am'ni-ote. I. a. Anamniotic. II. n. One of the Anamnionata.— an-am"ni-ot'ic, a. & n.

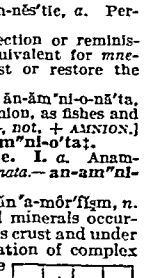
an"a-mor'phism, 1 an'ə-mōr'fizm; 2 ăn'a-môr'fĭsm, n. 1. Geol. A metamorphism of rocks and minerals occurring at considerable depths in the earth's crust and under great pressures, resulting in the formation of complex mineral compounds from those of more simple constitution. See METAMORPHISM. 2. Same as ANAMORPHOSIS.

an"a-mor'pho-scope, 1 an'ə-mōr'fo-skōp; 2 ăn'a-môr'fo-scōp, n. A vertical cylindrical mirror so placed as to produce a correct image of an object from a purposely distorted representation of it on a horizontal plane at the mirror's base. [< ANAMORPHOSIS + -SCOPE.]

an"a-mor'phose, 1 an'ə-mōr'fōs; 2 ăn'a-môr'fōs, vt. [Rare.] To represent in anamorphosis; distort in such a manner that when viewed in a certain way the picture appears regular or natural.

an"a-mor'pho-sis, 1 an"ə-mōr'fo-sis; 2 ăn'a-môr'fo-sĭs, n. 1. Optics. A distorted representation of an object, so made that when viewed through a polyhedron, or from a particular point, or reflected from a specially constructed mirror, as an anamorphoscope, a correct image of the object is obtained; also, the process of making such a representation, or that by which it is corrected. 2. Biol. A gradual change of form traceable in the history of a group of animals or plants, usually to a higher type.



Anamorphosis.

3. Bot. A distortion or anomalous growth of any plant-organ. [< Gr. anamorphōsis, < ana, anew, + morphē, form.] an"a-mor'pho-sy‡.

an"a-mor'phote, a. Producing distortion or anamorphosis.

an"a-mor'phous, 1 an'ə-mōr'fus; 2 ăn'a-môr'fŭs, a. 1. Pertaining to or characterized by anamorphosis; distorted. 2. Pertaining to anamorphism. an"a-mor'phic‡.

An"a-mo'sa, 1 an"ə-mō'sa; 2 ăn'a-mō'sa, n. A city; county-seat of Jones county, Ia.

A'nan, 1 ē'nan; 2 ā'năn, n. Bib. Neh. x, 26.

a-nan', 1 ə-nan'; 2 a-năn'. I. interj. [Prov. Eng. or Local, U. S.] Eh? what? a response to a remark not heard or understood. II‡. adv. Anon.

a"na-na'plas, 1 a'na-nū'plas; 2 ā'nā-nā'plăs, n. [P. I.] A tall Old World tropical tree (Albizzia procera) with bipinnate leaves and long terminal panicles of globular few-flowered heads of greenish-white flowers. Its wood, inferior as timber, serves for fuel and yields incense and a dye used in preparing hides for sole-leather, saddles, etc.: sometimes cultivated for ornament. an"a-na'ples‡.

a-na'nas, 1 ə-nē'nas or ə-nā'nas; 2 a-nā'nas or a-nā'nas, n. 1. [S. Am.] The pineapple or an allied fruit, as the pinguin (Bromelia pinguin). a-na'na‡.

Farewell, old Scotia's bleak domains,
Far dearer than the torrid plains
Where rich ananas blow! BURNS Farewell st. 1.

2. [A-] Bot. A genus of tropical American plants of the pineapple family (Bromeliaceæ), including the pineapple (A. sativa). An"a-nas'sa‡. [Braz., < Peru, nanas.]

An"an-chyt'i-dæ, 1 an'aŋ-kit'ı-dī; 2 ăn'ăn-cŷt'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Echin. A family of spatangoideans with an ovate or nearly cordate test, and ambulacra, in a bivium and trivium similar or slightly diverse, flush and apetalous. An"an-chy'tes, n. (t. g.) — an"an-chy'tid, n.— an"an-chy'toid, a.

an-an'drı-ous, 1 an-an'drı-us; 2 ăn-ăn'drĭ-ŭs, a. 1. Unmarried: said of women. 2. Not virile; impotent: said of men. 3. Bot. Anandrous. [< Gr. anandros, < an- priv. + anēr (andr-), man.]

an-an'drous, 1 an-an'drus; 2 ăn-ăn'drŭs, a. 1. Bot. (1) Destitute of stamens, as a female flower. (2) Cryptogamous. 2. Anandrious. [< Gr. anandros, without a man.]

an"a-nep"i-on'ic, 1 an'ə-nep'ı-on'ık; 2 ăn'a-nĕp'ĭ-ŏn'ĭc, a. Approaching the neplonic stage.

an-an'gi-oid, 1 an-an'jı-eid; 2 ăn-ăn'gĭ-ŏid, a. Without blood-vessels: said of the disk of the retina. an-an"gi-ot'ic‡; an-an'gi-ous‡.

An-an"gi-ol'da, 1 an-an'jı-eil'də; 2 ăn-ăn'gĭ-ŏl'da, n. pl. Zool. A group of mammals comprising those with anangioid eyes.

an-an'gu-lar, 1 an-aŋ'gıu-lar; 2 ăn-ăn'gŭ-lar, a. [Rare.] Not angular; having no angle. [< AN-, not, + ANGULAR.]

A-na'ni, 1 ə-nē'nı; 2 a-nā'nĭ, n. Bib. 1 Chron. iii, 24.

An"a-ni'a, 1 an"ə-nai'ə; 2 ăn"a-nī'a, n. Bib. (Doual).

An"a-ni'ah, 1 an"ə-nai'ə; 2 ăn"a-nī'a, n. Bib. Neh. xi, 32.

An"a-ni'as, 1 an"ə-nai'əs; 2 ăn"a-nī'as, n. 1. Bib. The husband of Sapphira, who, on being rebuked by Peter for lying, fell dead. Acts v, 1–6. 2. [Colloq.] Any liar. 3. A disciple in Damascus who was sent by a vision to restore Paul's sight. Acts ix, 10–18. 4. The high priest in Jerusalem before whom Paul was brought for trial. Acts xxiii, 2–5. 5. In Ben Jonson's comedy The Alchemist, a canting deacon sent from Amsterdam by his pastor and others to learn the whereabouts of their money. [Heb., grace of the Lord.]

A-na'nief, 1 ə-nā'nyef; 2 ā-nā'nyĕf, n. A town in Kherson, Ukraine.

A-nan'i-el, 1 ə-nan'ı-el; 2 a-năn'ĭ-ĕl, n. Bib. (Doual).

A'nan-ism, 1 ē'nən-izm; 2 ā'nan-ĭsm, n. The tenets of an ascetic Hebrew sect founded by Anan: a form of Karaism which completely disappeared during the 10th century. See KARAISM.— A'nan-ite, n. A follower of Anan.

a-na"ni-zap'ta, 1 ə-nā"nı-zāp'tə; 2 a-nā"nĭ-zăp'ta, n. A word anciently engraved on stone, gems, etc., perhaps as a magical preventive of disease. a-na"ni-sab'[or -sap']ta‡.

A-nan'ta, 1 ą-nūn'tą; 2 ą̄-năn'tą, n. [Sans.] Hind. Myth. The infinite: applied to the god Vishnu and to other deities.

The Holy One spoke:— and I am Ananta among the Nagas. Bhagavad Gitá tr. by J. C. Thomson, x, 29. [1874.]

An"an-ta-pur', 1 an'an-tə-pūr'; 2 ăn'ăn-ta-pŭr', n. A district in Madras, India.

an-an'ther-ous, 1 an-an'thər-us; 2 ăn-ăn'ther-ŭs, a. Bot. Without anthers. [< AN-, not, + ANTHER.] an-an'ther-ate‡.

an-an'ther-um, 1 an-an'thər-um; 2 ăn-ăn'ther-ŭm, n. Bot. A filament without an anther; a staminodium.

an-an'thous, 1 an-an'thus; 2 ăn-ăn'thŭs, a. Bot. Flowerless. [< Gr. ananthēs, < an- priv. + anthos, flower.]

an'a-nym, 1 an'ə-nim; 2 ăn'a-nym, n. A real name written backward, as John Dralloc (Collard). See BOUSTROPHEDON. [< ANA- + Gr. onoma, name.]

A-na'o, 1 ą-nū'o; 2 ą̄-nā'o, n. A town in Tarlac province, Luzon, P. I.

A-na'pa, 1 ą-nū'pą; 2 ą̄-nā'pą, n. A seaport of Kuban district, Russia, on the Black Sea.

an"a-pa'gan-ize, vt. [Rare.] To repaganize.

a-na'pa-ite, 1 ə-nū'pı-ait or ə-nap'ı-ait; 2 a-nā'pa-īt or a-năp'a-ĭt, n. Mineral. A greenish-white phosphate of calcium and iron containing water of crystallization and consisting of transparent crystals of the triclinic system. See CRYSTALLIZATION. [< Anapa, in Russia.]

an"a-pei-rat'ic, 1 an'ə-pai-rat'ık; 2 ăn'a-pī-răt'ĭc, a. Pathol. Caused by the too frequent or prolonged exercise of the same muscles in the same way: said of writers' cramp, etc. [< Gr. anapeirasthai, try again, < ana, again, + peiraō, try.]

an'a-pest, } 1 an'ə-pest; 2 ăn'a-pĕst, n. Pros. 1. A an'a-pæst, } three-syllable measure containing two short or unstressed syllables followed by one long or stressed syllable (⏑ ⏑ –); the reverse of a dactyl. 2. A verse made up of or characterized by such measures; as,

Thĕ Assŷr | iăn căme dŏwn | lĭke thĕ wŏlf | ŏn thĕ fŏld,
And hĭs cŏ | hŏrts wĕre glĕam | ĭng wĭth pûr | plĕ ănd gŏld.
BYRON Destruction of Sennacherib st. 1.

3. A musical foot accented in like manner. [< L. anapæstus, < Gr. anapaistos, < ana, back, + paio, strike.]

an"a-pes'tic, } 1 an"ə-pes'tık; 2 ăn'a-pĕs'tĭc, a. Of, an"a-pæs'tic, } pertaining to, or of the nature of an anapest; composed of anapests. -ti-cal‡.— -ti-cal-ly, adv.

an'a-pes'tic, } n. An anapest; also, versification in anapests.
an"a-pæs'tic, }

an"a-phal"an-tal'a-sis, 1 an"ə-fal'an-tal'ə-sis; 2 ăn'a-făl'ăn-tā'a-sĭs, n. Baldness, especially of the front part of the head; loss of the eyebrows. [< Gr. anaphalantiasis, < ana, up, + phalanthos, bald.] an"a-pha-lan'tis‡.

an'a-phase, 1 an'ə-fēz; 2 ăn'a-fās, n. Biol. The amphiaster phase of karyokinesis in which chromatin accumulates at each extremity of the nuclear spindle. See KARYOKINESIS. [< ANA- + PHASE.]

an-ar'chi-cal, } a. 1. Of or pertaining to anarchy; without or opposed to government; tending to cause anarchy; lawless.

The disposition of man is so anarchical . . . that absolute government alone is good. LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. i, p. 11. [A. 1873.]

2. Of or pertaining to anarchism. an-ar'chal‡; an-ar'chi-al‡. — an-ar'chi-cal-ly, adv.

an'arch-ism, 1 an'ərk-izm; 2 ăn'arc-ĭsm, n. 1. The principles, practises, or characteristic spirit of anarchists; the theory that all forms of government are wrong and unnecessary.

Sociologically it belongs to the 19th century, and Pierre Joseph Proudhon is regarded as the father of the system; according to him anarchy is order, and man is naturally good. Anarchism aims at excluding authority from society, and setting up extreme individualism, but, generally speaking, it repudiates violent methods, and hopes for a gradual evolution toward its goal. The party of anarchy as a violent group dates from The Hague Congress of 1872, after which the Russian revolutionist, M. Bakunin, organized the terrorist section. It was in the 6th congress of the Social party at Geneva in 1863 that the term anarchist was first applied to the militant section of that body.

2. Anarchy.

Anarchism is the philosophy of a new social order based on liberty unrestricted by man-made law, the theory that all forms of government are based on violence.

EMMA GOLDMAN Letter to Standard Dict. Jan. 3, '10.

V. S. YARROS in New Encyc. of Social Ref. p. 45. [r. & w. co.'08.]

an'arch-ist, 1 an'ərk-ist; 2 ăn'arc-ĭst, n. 1. A believer in anarchism; one opposed to all forms of coercive government and invasive authority: often applied to one who would use violence to destroy the existing social and civil order of things. 2. One who advocates anarchy or absence of government as the ideal of political liberty and social harmony. — an'arch-ist-com"mu-nist, n. A type of anarchist believing in the common possession of the land and all means of production, the industries and affairs of the communal society to be conducted directly by the free agreement and cooperation of voluntary groups, without the medium of any governmental or state authority. The anarchist-communist differs from the socialist mainly in that the latter believes in the collective ownership and cooperative conduct of the major industries and public utilities and in the regulation of the affairs of society by legal processes and under the authority of the organized state. — a.-individualist, n. A type of anarchist who believes in private property based on unlimited competition, freed from all artificial restraints or state privilege. — a. of the deed, an anarchist who occasionally resorts to an act of violence against representatives of oppression to express a protest against, or to draw public attention to, existing social wrongs. See NIHILISM; PROPAGANDA BY DEED; TERRORISM. — philosophic a., a member of the non-resistant school of anarchism as represented by Tolstoy: applied also to other schools of anarchism.

A friend of mine calls them [the Eskimos] the philosophic anarchists of the North. ROBERT E. PEARY Discovery of the North Pole ch. v, p. 47. [r. A. S. CO. '10.]

an'ar-chy, 1 an'ər-ki; 2 ăn'ar-cy, n. 1. Absence of government; disbelief in and disregard of invasion and authority based on governmental coercion; a condition of society regulated by voluntary agreement instead of government: often applied to social and political confusion and disorder.

Government and co-operation are . . . the laws of life. Anarchy and competition, eternally and in all things, the laws of death. RUSKIN Modern Painters vol. v, p. 166. [w. & s. 1860.]

2. Anarchism. [< Gr. anarchia, < anarchos; see AN-ARCH.]

SYN.: (popular conception): chaos, communism, confusion, disintegration, disorder, insubordination, lawlessness, rebellion, revolution, riot, sedition, tumult. Chaos refers to matter or a condition of things not yet brought into order. Lawlessness is a temper of mind or condition of the community which may result in anarchy. Confusion, disorder, riot, and tumult are incidental and temporary outbreaks of lawlessness, but may not be anarchy. Insubordination is individual disobedience. Sedition is the plotting, rebellion the fighting, against the existing government. When rebellion is successful it is called revolution; but there may be revolution without rebellion; as, the English Revolution of 1688. Anarchy, when more than temporary protest against authority and government, is entire disintegration of organized government, in which it is believed that social order may exist without government. See REVOLUTION. — ANT.: (popular conception): authority, command, control, domination, dominion, empire, government, law, order, organization, rule, sovereignty, supremacy. ALEXANDER BERKMAN, in a letter to the Standard Dictionary (Jan. 16, '10), gives also empire, human law, invasion, oppression, outside rule, slavery, violence.

an'ker, } To bring to anchor; secure or fasten by an anchor, as a ship, cable, or the like. 2. To fix firmly, as if by an anchor; make secure.

II. i. 1. To come to anchor; lie at anchor. 2. To become fixed, settled, secure, or abiding. See ANKER. [< F. ancrer, < LL. ancoro, < L. ancora; see ANCHOR¹, n.] an'chor¹, n. 1. Naut. The implement that holds a floating vessel to the bottom by means of a connecting cable. It commonly consists of a main shaft, called the shank, having at one end diverging arms terminating in flattened points curving upward, called flukes, and a stock of wood or iron at the other end of the shank at right angles to the shank and to the plane of the arms. The part of the shank above the stock terminates in the head, the corresponding end at the junction of the arms constituting the crown. In the head is the ring or shackle, to which the cable is attached. Many variations of this common form are in use.

Anchors in senses 1 and 2 are named (1) from their use; as, drag-anchor (let go under the fore foot with a slack chain, serving to indicate when a vessel begins to drag her anchor), drift-a. (a drag-anchor), floating a. (a sea-anchor), jury-a. (temporary), stream-a. (for temporary use, as in a river), kedge-a. (for kedging or warping); (2) from the object of attachment; as, ice-a.; (3) from their shape; as, grapnel a., mushroom a., screw a.; (4) from their position on shipboard; as, bow-a. (carried at the bow), sea-a. (a float, to which, by means of a hawser, a vessel may ride out a gale), sheet-a. (carried abaft the fore-rigging: formerly the largest anchor).

> Our anchor soon must change the lay of merry craftsmen here
> For the yeo-heave-o, and the heave-away and the sighing seaman's cheer. SAMUEL FERGUSON Forging the Anchor st. 3.

2. Any device for holding an object to the ground or to other fixed objects, or for resisting tension or the like; as, the anchor of bridge-cables or of a balloon. 3. Figuratively, anything that makes stable or secure.

> If you fear, Cast all your cares on God,—that anchor holds.
> TENNYSON Enoch Arden st. 13.

4. Arch. (1) The pointed ornament forming an element of the egg-and-dart molding. (2) A clamp, often ornamental, on either end of a tie-rod, used to prevent the bulging of a wall or the spreading of any related constructive members. 5. An iron plate used

Thro' which the spirit breathes no more?
TENNYSON In Memoriam cv, st. 5.

3. Her. Obsolete; superseded. 4. [Archaic.] Former; past; also, venerable; sage. [< F. ancien, < LL. antianus, < ante, before.]

SYN.: aged, antiquated, antique, gray, hoary, immemorial, old, olden, time-honored, time-worn, venerable. Ancient, from the Latin, through the French, is the more stately, old, from the Saxon, the more familiar word. Familiarity, on one side, is near to contempt; thus we say, an old coat, an old hat. On the other hand, familiarity is akin to tenderness, and thus old is a word of endearment; as, "the old homestead," the "old oaken bucket." "Tell me the old, old story!" has been sung feelingly by millions; "tell me that ancient story" would remove it out of all touch of human sympathy. Olden is a stateller form of old, and is applied almost exclusively to time, not to places, buildings, persons, etc. As regards periods of time, the familiar are also the near; thus, the old times are not too far away for familiar thought and reference; the olden times are more remote, ancient times still further removed. Gray, hoary, and moldering refer to outward and visible tokens of age. Venerable expresses the involuntary reverence that we yield to the majestic and the long-enduring; as, that venerable pile. See AGED; ANTIQUE; OBSOLETE; PRIMEVAL. — ANT.: fresh, modern, new, newfangled, new-fashioned, novel, recent. — ancient demesne, a species of copyhold tenure, of lands which were in the hands of the crown in the time of Edward the Confessor, or William the Conqueror, and are so entered in the Domesday Book. BLACKSTONE bk. ii, p. 99. — an'cient-ism, n. A low form of religion in which divine honors are paid to the men of long ago. — an'cient-ly, adv. — an'cient-ness, n. — an'cient-ry, n. 1. Ancientness; also, things belonging to ancient times.

an-cy'roid, a. Same as ANKYROID. [AMPERSAND.

and, 1 and; 2 ănd, n. The name of the character, &. See and, conj. 1. Together with; joined with; added to; furthermore: a particle used in general to connect words, phrases, and sentences: the typical conjunction in copulative coordination; as, John and Henry are well; to die and be at rest; he thought so then, and he thinks so now.

Words, phrases, and sentences so connected are grammatically coordinate, altho logically one or more of them may be dependent; as, June will come, and the roses; he fell into bad company, and squandered his patrimony.

2. In addition, to continue the narrative: merely introductive, continuative, ordinative, or expletive, the coordinate thoughts often having but little interdependence: a use frequent in simple narration, especially in the Bible.

And the Lord said unto Moses, Stretch forth thine hand toward heaven. Ex. ix, 21.

Sometimes the conjunction is thus used to join a word, phrase, or sentence to something said by some one else, or passing in the mind. In this relation and often expresses surprize, reproach, anger, etc.; as, and [notwithstanding all this] you went there! and [in spite of all] you believe it?

3. Yet in addition; on the other hand; yet; but: approaching an adversative relation; as, so rich, and lives like a beggar.

God made the country, and man made the town.
COWPER Task bk. i, l. 749.

4. Also; even: approaching an adverbial sense: often joined to but, especially in ballad poetry: now employed only as an imitative archaism.

She brought to him her beauty and truth,
But and broad earldoms three.
LOWELL Singing Leaves div. iii, st. 9.

5. Also, in continued series: expressing a large indefinite number by reduplication; as, he has believed it for years and years, that is, for many years.

I do rouse sometimes. But what then? always haggling and haggling. GOLDSMITH Good-natured Man act i, sc. 1.

6. Also, what is more important: intensive or enhansive; as, he did the work, and he did it well.

Speak truth and the whole truth. SHELLEY Cenci act v, sc. 2.

7. But also of a different character: distinctive or contrastive, and expressing the fact that things are too unlike to be conjoined in one total, whose difference is seen by simply putting them side by side; as, there are peaches and peaches, that is, peaches of very different quality. 8. Purposive or resultant; as, try and do your duty; go and bring my hat. Such expressions may have a twofold explanation. They may express merely the close conjunction of the two acts, the idea of purpose or result belonging to the verb (try or go) rather than to the and, which still retains its conjunctive force; or, the and may be used as a common or colloquial equivalent of to used with the infinitive— "try and do" and "go and bring" being used for "try to do" and "go to bring"— in which case the and carries the idea of purpose or result.

And-va're, 1 and-wä'rɪ; 2 ănd-wä'rē, n. Norse Myth. Literally, the wary spirit; a fish-shaped dwarf. And-va'rit.— Andvare force, the foss or cascade in which the dwarf Andvare dwelt in the shape of a pike. A. foss†.

And-va're-naut, 1 and-w'rɪ-naut; 2 ănd-wä'rē-nout, n. Norse Myth. The ring of Andvare, cursed by him as baneful to all who possessed it. And-va'ra-naut†.

ane, 1 ēn or yen; 2 ăn or yĕn, a. & n. [Scot. & Dial., Eng.] One.

-ane, suffix. 1. Same as -AN: where, however, both the -an and -ane forms exist, it is with a difference of meaning, as in human, humane. 2. Chem. Denoting a hydrocarbon of the paraffin series (C_nH_{2n+2}) (according to Hofman's classification); as, methane, ethane, propane, etc.

a-neal', vt. To anneal.

a-near', vt., adv., & prep. [Archaic or Poet.] Near.

a-neath', 1 ə-nīth'; 2 ə-nēth', adv. & prep. [Archaic or Poet.] Beneath.

an'ec-dot"age, 1 an'ek-dōt'ɪj; 2 ăn'ĕc-dōt'aj, n. 1. Anecdotal matter; a collection of anecdotes; anecdotes collectively.

All history, therefore, being built partly, and some of it altogether, upon anecdotage, must be a tissue of lies. DE QUINCEY Narrative Papers, On War in vol. ii, p. 200. [T. & T. 1853.]

2. A condition of mind, or period of life, in which one is given to telling anecdotes: punning on dotage.

When a man fell into his anecdotage, it was a sign for him to retire from the world. DISRAELI Lothair p. 95. [A. 1870.]

an'ec-dote, 1 an'ek-dōt; 2 ăn'ĕc-dōt, n. 1. A brief account of some interesting event or incident; especially, a personal or biographical incident; a short story.

Anecdotes are relations of detached interesting particulars. Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. ii, p. 2.

2. Anecdotes collectively; the habit or faculty of telling anecdotes; as, full of wit and anecdote. 3. [-DO-TA, pl.] Details of the secret history of courts, governments, or public men. [F., < Gr. anekdota, < an- priv. + ek, out, + didōmi, give.]

SYN.: incident, legend, myth, narration, narrative, story, tale. An anecdote tells briefly some incident, assumed to be fact. If its truth is represented as more or less questionable, it is a story. If it passes close limits of brevity, it ceases to be an anecdote, and becomes a narrative or narration. A traditional or mythical story of ancient times is a legend. See ALLEGORY; STORY.— ANT.: annals, biography, chronicle, history, memoir.— PREP.: an anecdote of, about, concerning, in regard to.

— an'ec-do"tal, a. Of, pertaining to, containing, or like anecdotes.— an"ec-do-ta'rI-an, n. [Rare.] An anecdotist.— an'ec-dot"ed, pa. Made the subject of anecdotes. — an"dec-dot'Ic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to anecdotes; anecdotal. 2. Having the habit of telling anecdotes. an"ec-dot'I-calt; an'ec-do"tIncɪ.— an"ec-dot'I-cal-ly, adv. — an'ec-dot"ist, n. One who collects, publishes, or is given to telling anecdotes.

an"e-chI"no-plac'Id, 1 an'ɪ-kaI'no-plas'ɪd; 2 ăn"e-cī'no-plag'id, a. Echin. Having no spines encircling the madreporic plate. [< AN-, not, + Gr. echinos, hedgehog, + plax, plate.]

a-nec"to-bran'chI-ate, 1 ə-nek'to-braŋ'kɪ-ɪt; 2 ə-nĕc'to-brăn'ci-at, a. Without external gills, characteristic of the Melonitoida of the echinoids.

an'e-lacet, n. Anlace. an'e-last; an'last.

a-nele', 1 ə-nīl'; 2 ə-nēl', vt. [Archaic.] To anoint; especially, to administer extreme unction to. [< AS. an, on, + ele, oil.] — a-nel'ert, n.

an"e-lec'trIc, 1 an'ɪ-lek'trɪk; 2 ăn"e-lĕc'tric. I. a. Non-electric. II. n. A non-electric substance: a term formerly applied to metals because, being good conductors, they apparently could not be electrified by friction.

an"e-lec-trot'o-nus, 1 an'ɪ-lek-trot'o-nus; 2 ăn"e-lĕc-trŏt'o-nŭs, n. The state of diminished irritability of the nerves or muscles produced, in the region near the anode, by the passage of an electric current through them. Compare CATELECTROTONUS. [< AN-, not, + Gr. ēlektron, amber, + tonos, strain, < teinō, stretch.] — an"e-lec"tro-ton'Ic, a.— an"e-lec"tro-ton'I-cal-ly, adv.

An-el'y-trop'I-dæ, 1 an-el'ɪ-trop'ɪ-dɪ; 2 ăn-ĕl'y-trŏp'i-dē, n. pl. Herp. A family of anelytropoidean lizards, with one premaxillary, no cranial arches, and covered eyes. An-el'y-trops, n. (t. g.) [< AN-, not, + Gr. elytron, shard, + ōps, face.]— an"e-lyt'ro-pid, n.— an"e-lyt'ro-poid, a. — An"e-lyt'ro-pol'de-a, n. pl. Herp. A superfamily of lizards with one suspensorium and the pelvic arch obsolete. — an"e-lyt'ro-pol'de-an, a. & n. [out elytra.

an-el'y-trous, 1 an-el'ɪ-trus; 2 ăn-ĕl'y-trŭs, a. Entom. With-a-ne'mad, 1 ə-nī'mad; 2 ə-nē'măd, n. Bot. A blow-out plant, as the blow-out grass. See under GRASS.

a-ne'mi-a, } 1 ə-nī'mɪ-ə; 2 ə-nē'mi-a, n. Pathol.
a-næ'mi-a, } Deficiency of blood or of red corpuscles; bloodlessness. [< Gr. anaimia, < an- priv. + haima, blood.] — cerebral anemia, same as MILK-FEVER, 2.— idiopathic a., Biermer's disease. — miners' a., same as ANKYLOSTOMIASIS.— progressive pernicious a., Biermer's disease.— a-ne"ma-to'sis, n. Idiopathic anemia. a-ne"ma-to'sist.— a-ne'mi-ac, n. Med. A person affected with anemia. a-næ'mi-act.— a-ne'mic, a. Pathol. Of, pertaining to, or affected with anemia; as, an anemic murmur. a-næ'mict.— an"e-mot'ro-phy, n. Deficiency in formation of blood. an"e-mot'ro-phyt.

a-ne'mi-ous, 1 ə-nī'mɪ-us; 2 ə-nē'mi-us, a. [Rare.] Windy; growing in windy places: said of plants. [< Gr. anemos, wind.] [out formation.

a-ne'mi-um, 1 ə-nī'mɪ-um; 2 ə-nē'mi-ŭm, n. Bot. A blowan'e-mo-, 1 an'ɪ-mo- or ə-nem'o-; 2 ăn'e-mo- or ə-nĕm'o-. From Greek anemos, wind: a combining form.

Words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

an"e-mo-ba-rom'e-ter, 1 an'ɪ-mo-bə-rom'ɪ-tər; 2 ăn'e-mo-bə-rŏm'e-ter, n. A form of pressure-anemometer invented by Wilke, of Stockholm, in 1785, in which the pressure of the wind on a vertical plate is communicated to a piston pressing upon a leather bag containing mercury. The last-named causes a column of colored liquid to rise in a graduated tube. The term has also been applied to other forms of pressure-anemometer.

a-nem'o-chord, n. A variety of the æolian harp.

a-nem'o-chore, n. Bot. A plant distributed by the wind.

an"e-mo-cl-ne'mo-graph, 1 an'ɪ-mo-saI-nī'mo-graf; 2 ăn'e-mo-cl-nē'mo-grăf, n. Meteor. A recording anemometer designed to show directly the velocity of the wind at every moment, instead of the amount of wind-movement.

an"e-mo-cll'no-graph, 1 an'ɪ-mo-klaI'no-graf; 2 ăn'e-mo-cll'no-grăf, n. Meteor. An instrument for recording the angular deviations of the wind from a horizontal path.

an'e-moc'ra-cy, n. [Humorous.] Government by the winds, or a state so governed.— a-nem'o-gram, n. A tracing made by an anemograph.— a-nem'o-graph, n. An instrument that makes, by tracing a curved line, an automatic record of the velocity, force, and direction of the wind: sometimes limited to a recorder of velocity and direction.— a-nem'o-graph'Ic, a.— an"e-mog'ra-phy, n. 1. The art or act of recording automatically the velocity and direction of winds. 2. A description of or treatise on winds or their phenomena. — an"e-mol'o-gy, n. The branch of meteorological science that deals with the winds and their phenomena.— an"e-mo-log'Ic, -I-cal, a.— an"e-mo-met'ro-graph, n. An anemograph, especially one that records both force and direction.— an"e-mo-met"ro-graph'Ic, a.

an"e-mom'e-ter, 1 an'ɪ-mom'ɪ-tər; 2 ăn"e-mŏm'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the force or velocity of wind, operating usually either by suction or pressure.

Anemometer. (Robinson.)

The word anemometer is commonly used to name the instrument employed for measuring the velocity of the wind, and wind vane for the instrument used to indicate the direction of the wind. C. F. MARVIN, U. S. Weather Bureau, Letter to Standard Dict. April 23, 1910.

Upward of three hundred forms of anemometer have been described, and they are frequently referred to under the names of their respective inventors; as, Biram's, Casella's, Dechevrens's, Lind's, Osler's, Robinson's, etc. Anemometers have been classified by Laughton and J. W. Moore as follows: (1) pendulum; (2) bridles; (3) pressure-plate; (4) pressure on a fluid; (5) velocity (wheels, fans, cups, etc.); (6) evaporation or temperature; (7) suction; (8) direction only; (9) inclination; (10) musical; (11) hellcold; (12) the anemo-cinemograph. [< ANEMO- + Gr. metron, measure.] — Dines's pressure-tube anemometer, a very sensitive form of pressure- and suction-anemometer which, when arranged to record automatically, shows the changes in wind-force from moment to moment. — Hagemann's a., a wind-gage having a vertical tube attached to a manometer, the upper end of the tube being fitted with a small tip and an opening across which the wind blows, producing a suction or rarefaction within the tube which indicates the velocity of the wind. Abbe and Dines have produced special modifications of this instrument.— Robinson's a., one consisting of four hemispherical cups supported at the ends of four light horizontal radial arms rotating on a vertical axis which actuates a recording instrument in a box at its base.— an"e-mo-met'ric, -ri-cal, a.— -ri-cal-ly, adv.— an"e-mom'e-try, n. The art of determining the velocity, force, and direction of the winds.— an"e-mom'e-trist, n. An expert in anemometry.

a-nem'o-nal, 1 ə-nem'o-nəl; 2 ə-nĕm'o-nal, a. Pertaining to or characteristic of the wind.

a-nem'o-ne, 1 ə-nem'o-nɪ; 2 ə-nĕm'o-ne, n. 1. Any plant of the genus Anemone; a windflower; anemony.

And at the root thro' lush green grasses burn'd The red anemone. TENNYSON Dream of Fair Women st. 18.

Wood-anemone in flower. a, fruit.

2. [A-]. Bot. A large genus of perennial herbs of the crowfoot family, having radical leaves lobed or dissected, and stem-leaves forming an involucre remote from the flower. 3. A sea-anemone. [< L. anemone, < Gr. anemōnē, windflower, < anemos, wind.] — an"e-mon'Ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or derived from the plant-anemone.— anemonic acid, an amorphous powder obtained from anemonin by treatment with baryta-water. — a-nem'o-nin, n. Chem. A poisonous crystalline compound ($C_{11}H_{12}O_4$) contained in the leaves of certain anemones. a-nem'o-nine†.

A-nem"o-nel'la, 1 ə-nem'o-nel'ə; 2 ə-nĕm'o-nĕl'a, n. Bot. A monotypic genus of plants of the crowfoot family (Ranunculaceæ; the species of which are now referred to Syndesmon, which see).

a-nem'o-ny, n. [-NIES, pl.] Same as ANEMONE, 1.

And the untaught Spring is wise In cowslips and anemonies. EMERSON Nature pt. i, st 1.

an"e-mop'a-thy, n. Med. The use of inhalation as a curative agent.— a-nem'o-phile, n. A plant with anemophilous flowers.— an"e-moph'I-lous, a. Bot. Wind-fertilized: said of flowers fecundated by wind-borne pollen.— an"e-mo-moph'I-ly, n. Bot. Wind-fertilization.— an"e-mo-pho'bI-a, n. A nervous dread of strong winds.— a-nem'o-scope, n. An indicator of the direction of the wind, as a weathercock or a dial with a pointer.— an"e-mo'sis, n. A condition of trees in which, as the supposed effect of the wind, there is a separation of the concentric layers.

an"e-mot'ro-pism, n. Adjustment of position to the wind: said of winged insects.— an"e-mo-trop'Ic, a.

an-en"ce-pha'lI-a, 1 an-en'sɪ-fā'lɪ-ə; 2 ăn-ĕn"ce-fā'li-a, n. Teratol. Congenital absence of brain. [< Gr. anenkephalos, without brain, < an- priv. + en, in, + kephalē, head.] an"en-ceph'a-lyt.— an"en-ceph'a-loid, a. Teratol. Partially anencephalous.— an"en-ceph"a-lot'ro-phy, n. Pathol. Atrophy of the encephalon or brain. an"en-ceph'a-lotroph'I-at.— an"en-ceph"a-lo-trophy'Ic, a.— an"en-ceph'a-lous, a. Teratol. Lacking a brain. an-en"ce-phal'ict.— an"en-ceph'a-lus, n. [-LI, pl.] Teratol. A monster with no brain.

an-end', 1 an-end'; 2 ăn-ĕnd', adv. 1. Naut. On end; endwise: said of a spar standing perpendicularly, or of a topmast when fidded. 2. [Archaic.] To the end; continuously; also, in the end; lastly: colloquially, anent.

a-nent', 1 ə-nent'; 2 ə-nĕnt', adv. [North. Eng. or Scot.] On the opposite side; opposite.—a-nenst', adv. & prep. Anent.

a-nent', prep. 1. Concerning; in regard to. 2. On a line with. 3. Facing toward. [< AS. onefen, < on, on, + efen, even.] an-en'ter-ous, 1 an-en'tər-us; 2 ăn-ĕn'ter-ŭs, a. Without an alimentary canal. [< Gr. an- priv. + entera, intestines, < en, in.] an-ep'I-a, 1 an-ep'ɪ-ə; 2 ăn-ĕp'i-a, n. Pathol. Loss of the power of speech. [< Gr. an- priv. + epos, word.]

an"e-pig'ra-phous, 1 an'ɪ-pig'rə-fus; 2 ăn"e-pig'ra-fŭs, a. Having no inscription, as occasionally on some coins. [< Gr. anepigraphos, < an- priv. + epi, on, + graphō, write.] an-ep"I-graph'Ict.

an-ep"I-plo'Ic, 1 an-ep'ɪ-plō'ɪk; 2 ăn-ĕp'i-plō'ic, a. Terat. Destitute of an epiploon or great omentum.

an-ep"I-thym'I-a, 1 an-ep'ɪ-thɪm'ɪ-ə; 2 ăn-ĕp'i-thym'i-a, n. [Archaic.] Pathol. Loss or impairment of the appetites. [< AN-, not, + Gr. epithymia, desire, + epi, on, < thymos, mind.]

A'ner, 1 ē'nər; 2 ā'ner, n. Bib. Gen. xiv, 13.

an-er'e-thIs'I-a, 1 an-er'ɪ-thɪz'ɪ-ə; 2 ăn-ĕr'e-thiz'i-a, n. Pathol. Decreased irritability: said of nerves. [< AN-, not, + ERETHISM.]

an"e-ret'ic, } 1 an'ı-ret'ık; 2 ăn"e-rĕt'ic, n. Med. Any an"æ-ret'ic, } agent that tends to destroy animal tissues. [< Gr. anairetikos, < ana, up, + haireō, take.]

an"en-er'gi-a‡; an-er'gi-a‡.— an'er-gic, a.

an'er-ly. [Scot. or Obs.] I. a. 1. Solitary; alone. 2. Retiring; shy; unsocial. 3. Self-absorbed. II. adv. Solely; only.

an'e-roid, 1 an'ı-roid; 2 ăn'e-rŏid. I. a. Not containing or using a fluid; as, an aneroid battery. II. n. 1. An aneroid barometer. 2. An aneroid battery. [< F. anéroïde, < Gr. a- priv. + nēros, wet (< naō, flow), + eidos, form.] — aneroid barometer, an instrument for showing the pressure of the atmosphere by means of the movements of the elastic top of an exhausted metallic box. The most sensitive aneroids show the variation of atmospheric pressure due to a difference of height of a few feet, and the instrument is hence much used in measuring altitudes. — an-er-old'o-graph, n. Meteor. A self-recording aneroid barometer.

Case and Mechanism of a Pocket Aneroid.

The aneroid consists of a flat cylindrical vacuum-box, fixed at the center to a foundation plate, while at the center of the upper surface is a metallic pillar, M, which acts upon a powerful steel spring, R. The varying atmospheric pressure causes the surface of the vacuum-chamber to rise and fall; these movements are transmitted to the spring, and thence by two levers, l and the latter rises a lever, l, to which is attached, which turns a drum, the axis of which bears the index-needle. A firm spiral spring keeps the chain constantly in proper tension. By this arrangement of multiplying levers, a very small movement of the surface of the vacuum-chamber causes a large deviation of the needle; one two-hundredth of an inch causing it to move through a space of 3 inches. (Queen.)

an"er-throp'si-a, } 1 an-er'ı-throp'sı-ə; 2 ăn-er'y-thrŏp'si-a, n. Color-blindness with respect to red. [< AN-, not, + Gr. erythros, red, + opsis, view.] an-er'y-throp"sy‡.

anes, 1 ēns or yens; 2 ăns or ĕns. I. adv. [Scot.] Once. II. pron. pl. Ones. — anes' er"rand, adv. [Scot.] Purposely; expressly.

an'e-sis, 1 an'ı-sis; 2 ăn'e-sĭs, n. 1. Pathol. The remission or abatement of symptoms, as of a fever. a-ne'si-a‡. 2. Mus. A downward progression in pitch, or lowering of pitch, as in tuning strings. [< Gr. anesis, < ana, back, + hiēmi, send.] an"es-the'si-a, } 1 an"e-san"æs-the'si-a, } thi'sı-ə or -zhi-a, n. Loss of sensation, especially of feeling, produced by disease or by some drug, as ether: used also figuratively: as, the anesthesia of time.

The artificial induction of anæsthesia . . . is a practice of great antiquity. . . . The employment of anæsthetics in surgery by the use of mandragora . . . is alluded to by Dioscorides and Pliny. Encyc. Brit., 11th edition, vol. i, p. 907, col. 2. [New York, 1910.]

[< Gr. anaisthēsia, < anaisthētos, insensible, < an- priv. + aisthētos, sensible, < aisthanomai; see ESTHETIC.] — local anesthesia, loss of sensation in some one part of the body, as that produced by cocain.

an"es-the'si-ant, } I. a. Producing anesthesia. II. n. an"æs-the'si-ant, } An anesthetic.

an"es-the-sim'e-ter, } 1 an"es-thı-sim'e-tər; 2 ăn"ĕsan"æs-the-sim'e-ter, } the-sĭm'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the amount of an anesthetic administered. [< ANESTHESIA + -METER.]

an"es-the'sin, } 1 an"es-thĭ'sın; 2 ăn"ĕs-thē'sin, n. an"æs-the'sin, } Chem. A white odorless and tasteless powder ($C_9H_{11}O_2N$) used as a local anesthetic and in medicine. [< ANESTHESIA.] an"æs-the'sine‡; an"es-the'sinet.

an"es-thet'ic, } 1 an"es-thet'ık; 2 ăn"ĕs-thĕt'ic. I. a.
an"æs-thet'ic, } Pertaining to or producing anesthesia. II. n. That which produces anesthesia. [< Gr. anaisthētos; see ANESTHESIA. — an"es-[or -æs]-thet'i-cal-ly, adv.

In 1800 Sir Humphry Davy, experimenting on nitrous oxide (the so-called "laughing gas"), discovered its anæsthetic properties. Encyc. Brit., 11th ed., vol. i, p. 907, col. 2.

an-es'the-tize, } 1 an-es'thı-taiz; 2 ăn-ĕs'the-tīz. tr.
an-æs'the-tize, } [-TIZED; -TIZ'ING.] To administer anesthetics to; render insensible by means of anesthetics. an-es'[or -æs']the-tise‡.

The patient is anæsthetized, and the current then passed through the tumor and all tissues for some distance around it by means of fine insulated needles. New-York Tribune Dec. 26, 1890, p. 10, col. 2.

a-neth', 1 ə-neth'; 2 a-nĕth', prep. [Scot.] Beneath.

an'e-that"ed, 1 an'ı-thet'ed; 2 ăn'e-thăt'ĕd, a. [Rare.] Prepared with dill as an ingredient. [< L. anethum, < Gr. anēthon, anise.]

an'e-thene, 1 an'ı-thin; 2 ăn'e-thēn, n. Chem. A volatile oil ($C_{10}H_{18}$), isomeric with oil of turpentine, contained in dill, etc. [< L. anethum, anise, < Gr. anēthon.]

an'e-thol, 1 an'ı-thōl or -thel; 2 ăn'e-thōl or -thŏl, n. Chem. An organic compound ($C_{10}H_{12}O$) contained in and forming the essential constituent of oils of anise, fennel, and tarragon. It occurs either as a solid at ordinary temperatures (anise-camphor, solid anethol) or as a volatile liquid (liquid anethol). Better called methyl allylphenol. 2. A fit of this passion, or its expression. 3. [Prov. Eng.] Inflammation as of any bodily organ or tissue. [ME. anger, affliction, trouble, < Icel. angr, grief, sorrow; cp. AS. ange, Goth. aggwus, narrow, L. ango, distress.]

Syn.: animosity, choler, displeasure, exasperation, fury, impatience, indignation, ire, irritation, offense, passion, rage, resentment, temper, wrath. Displeasure is the mildest and most general word. Choler and ire, now rare except in poetic or highly rhetorical language, denote a still, and the latter a persistent, anger. Temper used alone in the sense of anger is colloquial, tho we may correctly say a hot temper, a fiery temper, etc. Passion, tho a word of far wider application, may, in the singular, be employed to denote anger; "did put me in a towering passion," SHAKESPEARE Hamlet act v, sc. 2. Anger is sharp, sudden, and, like all violent passions, necessarily brief. Resentment (a feeling back or feeling over again) is persistent, the bitter brooding over injuries. Exasperation, a roughening, is a hot, superficial intensity of anger, demanding instant expression. Rage drives one beyond the bounds of prudence or discretion; fury is stronger yet, and sweeps one away into uncontrollable violence. Anger is personal and usually selfish, aroused by real or supposed wrong to oneself. Indignation is impersonal and unselfish displeasure at unworthy acts (L. indigna), i. e., at wrong as wrong. Pure indignation is not followed by regret, and needs no repentance; it is also more self-controlled than anger. Anger is commonly a sin; indignation is often a duty. Wrath is deep and perhaps vengeful displeasure, as when the people of Nazareth were "filled with wrath" at the plain words of Jesus (Luke iv, 28); it may, however, simply express the culmination of righteous indignation without malice in a pure being; as, the wrath of God. See ACRIMONY; ANIMOSITY; HATRED; IMPATIENCE; OFFENSE.—Ant.: amiability, forbearance, gentleness, long-suffering, mildness, patience, peace, peaceableness, peacefulness, self-control, self-restraint.—Prep.: anger at the insult; anger toward the offender.—an'ger-less, a.—an'ger-ly, adv. & a. [Archaic.] Somewhat angry; angrily. an"gi-en'chy-ma, 1 an"jı-eŋ'kı-mə; 2 ăn"ği-ĕŋ'cy-ma, n. Bot. Vascular tissue. [< Gr. angeion (< angos), vessel, + enchyma, infusion, < en, in, + cheō, pour.]

an'gild†, 1 ēn'gild; 2 ăn'ğĭld, n. Old Eng. Law. Money paid as amends for wrong done or injury inflicted on a person: sometimes, but erroneously, a single payment as distinguished from twigild (twofold) and trigild (threefold).

an'gi-na, 1 an'jı-nə or an-jai'nə; 2 ăn'ği-na or ăn-ği'na, n. Pathol. Any disease characterized by suffocating symptoms, as quinsy, diphtheria, croup, etc. [L. < ango, choke.]—an'gi-na pec'to-ris, neuralgia of the heart; breast-pang.—Vincent's a., a disease of the throat similar to diphtheria, but occasioned by a different microbe, the Bacillus fusiformis.—an'gi-noid, a. Resembling angina.—an'gi-nous, a. Pertaining to or partaking of angina; as, anginous diphtheria. an'gi-nal†; an'gi-nose†.—an"gi-no-pho'bi-a, n. Dread of an attack of angina pectoris.

an'gi-o-, 1 an'jı-o-; 2 ăn'ği-o-. From Greek angeion, a case, vessel, capsule: a combining form. The words in this group have also variants in which the combining form is spelled angeio-. The longer form is the older.—an'gi-o-blast, n. Embryol. One of the cells of the vascular area of the embryo concerned in the formation of blood-vessels.—an"gi-o-blas'tic, a. 1. Of, belonging to, or affecting angioblasts. 2. Producing blood-corpuscles or blood-vessels.—an'gi-o-carp, n. Bot. An angiocarpous plant. an"gi-o-car'pi-an†.—an"gi-o-car'pous, a. Bot. 1. Having the fruit covered by a distinct envelop. 2. Having the hymenium disposed inside the tissue of the sporocarp, as certain fungi. 3. Having the hymenium lining the interior of cavities (apothecia) as certain lichens. an"gi-o-car'pic†.—an"gi-o-cho-li'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the biliary ducts.—an'gi-o-clast, n. A surgical instrument, fashioned like a forceps, with which a diseased artery is compressed to prevent, or arrest, hemorrhage.—an"gi-o-gen'e-sis, n. Embryol. Formation and growth of the vascular system of an animal or plant. an"gi-og'e-ny†.—an"gi-o-gli-o'ma, n. Pathol. A vascular glioma.—an'gi-o-graph, n. Physiol. An instrument to register the blood-pressure in the superficial blood-vessels; a sphygmograph.—an"gi-og'ra-phy, n. 1. Anat. A description of the vascular system. 2. [Rare.] A description of the vessels, instruments, weights, and measures used by various nations.—an'gi-o-id, a. Like a vascular structure.—an"gi-o-ker"a-to'ma, n. [-MA-TA, pl.] Pathol. A rare disease of the skin, characterized by warty growths on dilated blood-vessels, seen in the extremities of individuals suffering from chilblains.—an"gi-o-leu-ci'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of the lymphatics; scrofulous inflammation.—an"gi-ol'o-gy, n. That part of systematic anatomy which relates to vessels.—an"gi-o-lym-phi'tis, n. Pathol. Same as LYMPHANGEITIS.—an"gi-o-lym-pho'ma, n. Pathol. A neoplasm formed of lymph-vessels.

an"gi-o'ma, n. Pathol. A tumor or morbid formation resulting from the dilatation of old or formation of new blood-vessels.—an"gi-o-ma-fa'ci-a, n. Pathol. A fatty or amyloid degeneration of a blood-vessel with consequent softening.—an"gi-om'a-tous, a.

an"gi-o-mon"o-sper'mous, a. Bot. Having one-seeded seed-vessels.—an"gi-o-my-o'ma, n. Pathol. A muscular neoplasm.—an"gi-o-ne'o-plasm, n. Pathol. A new growth consisting of blood-vessels. Compare ANGIOMA.—an"gi-o-neu-rec'to-my, n. Destruction of vessels and nerves; specif., the operation of cutting out those of the spermatic cord in order to cause atrophy of the prostate gland.—an"gi-o-neu"ro-e-de'ma, n. Pathol. A form of urticaria occasioned by vasomotor disturbance, characterized by sudden pinkish swellings of the skin.—an"gi-o-neu-ro'sis, n. Pathol. Deranged vasomotor action.—an"gi-o-neu-rot'ic, a.—an"gi-o-no'ma, n. Pathol. An ulcerated condition of a blood-vessel.—an"gi-o-pa-ral'y-sis, n. Pathol. Paralysis of the vasomotor nerves.—an"gi-o-par"a-lyt'ic, a.—an"gi-o-par'e-sis, n. Pathol. Partial paralysis of the vasomotor nerves.—an"gi-op'a-thy, n. Pathol. Disease of the vessels, particularly the blood-vessels.—an"gi-o-pla'ni-a, n. Abnormality of a blood-vessel as to either structure or position. an"gi-o-pla'ny†.—an"gi-or-rher'is, n. Pathol. The bursting of a blood-vessel.—an"gi-o-sar-co'ma, n. Pathol. A sarcoma in which blood-vessels constitute a conspicuous element.—an"gi-o-scle-ro'sis, n. A pathologic hardening of the walls of blood-vessels.—an"gi-o-scle-rot'ic, a.—an'gi-o-scope, n. An instrument for inspecting the capillary vessels in animals and plants.—an"gi-o'sis, n. Pathol. Any disease of the blood-vessels.—an'gi-o-spasm, n. Pathol. A spasmodic contraction of a blood-vessel.—an"gi-o-spas'tic, a.

Angiosperms are true flowering plants, often bearing bright bells or brilliant clusters of bloom.

[< AS. angel, angul, hook, fish-hook, < anga (= Ice. angi), point, sting.]

an'gle², v. [Rare.] I. t. To make angular; make (itself) an angle; drive into a corner, as a billiard-ball. II. i. To go into a corner; to turn at an angle.

an'gle³, n. 1. The point or line, on the inner or outer side, where two lines or surfaces meet; corner; point; edge; as, the angle of a wall; the sharp angles of a crystal. 2. A secluded place or region resembling a corner; a nook. 3. Geom. The figure or concept of two straight lines (sides) emanating from one point (the vertex), when only the difference of their direction is considered and not their length. Writers on geometry have used the word angle rather loosely, sometimes meaning by it apparently the vertex, sometimes the figure formed by the meeting lines, and sometimes the space included between them, but in the strictest mathematical sense it signifies that relation of the lines which is measured by the amount of rotation necessary to make one coincide with the other. This amount is commonly expressed in degrees, see DEGREE. When one line meets another so as to make the adjacent angles (AOC and COD) equal, both are right angles. An angle less than a right angle (as AOB or BOC) is an acute angle; when greater than a right angle (as BOD), an obtuse angle; when the sides go out in opposite directions (as AOD), a straight angle. Any angle not a right angle is an oblique angle. If one line meets another in such a way as to make the adjacent angles equal, they are both right angles. See also phrases. 4. Astrol. Any one of the four houses at the cardinal points. 5. Her. A bend in the band or ribbon of the ordinary. [F., < L. angulus, corner.]—adjacent angles, two angles having a common side, and vertices at the same point, as A and B. See fig. 2.—alternate angles, a pair of angles having different vertices on a common side, the other sides being oppositely directed, as A and D, or C and B. See fig. 2.—an'gle-bar", n. 1. An upright at the meeting of two faces of a polygonal window. 2. Print. An adjustable polished iron bar placed at an angle of 45 degrees to the axis of a cylinder in a web-press for the purpose of directing the web after printing to the place of assembling a multiple of webs before they enter the folder. —a.-bead, n. A vertical strip of rounded cross-section, protecting a salient angle of a wall; an angle-staff with beaded edge.—a.-beam, n. A beam the section of which is composed of two wings or members at an angle (usually of 90°) to each other.—a.-bearing, n. An angled pillow-block.—a.-berry, n. 1. Same as ANBURY. 2. [North. Eng.] Bot. The vetchling (Lathyrus pratensis).—a.-block, n. 1. A pulley used to change the direction of a hoisting-rope. 2. A casting in a truss, at the junction of a tie or strut and the chord.—a.-board, n. A board used for holding wood that is to be planed to a given angle.—a.-brace, n. 1. A strut in an angle; a diagonal tie. 2. A brace for drilling in a corner. See illus. under BRACE.—a.-bracket, n. 1. In engineering, a triangular iron frame used for strengthening angles. 2. In carpentry, a device, generally shaped like a right-angled triangle, used as a support or for strengthening purposes.—a.-brick, n. A brick shaped to fit a projecting angle of a polygonal structure.—a.-bulb, n. 1. A swelling, bulb-shaped in section, along the edge of a flange of an angle-bar. 2. An angle-bar having such a bulb-edged flange.—a.-capital, n. Arch. A capital at the corner of a structure. In an Ionic capital the two outward faces are sometimes voluted, the volutes being bent outward where they join at the outer angle.—a.-chuck, n. Same as ANGLE-PLATE.—a.-clip, n. A piece of iron bent to form a connection between two bars on beams of an angle.—a.-cock, n. A valve in an angle-fitting.—a.-dog, n. [Local, U. S.] An earth-worm.—a.-float, n. A plasterers' trowel made to fit an interior angle.—a.-gage, n. An instrument used in carpentry, joinery, and masonwork for marking, setting off, or testing angles.—a.-iron, n. A piece of iron in the form of an angle, as an L iron or V iron: used for joining pieces or as a component member of an iron structure.—a.-leaf, n. An ornamental, often leaf-shaped, device for strengthening an angle.—a.-meter, n. 1. A clinometer. 2. A device for determining the differences in angular velocity of the crank-shaft of an engine during a revolution.—a. of action, the angle through which a gear-wheel turns while any tooth is in contact with one tooth on the wheel meshing with it.—a. of advance (Engin.), see ANGULAR ADVANCE, under ADVANCE, n.—a. of contact. 1. Engin. (1) With toothed wheels, the angle through which the wheel turns while two given teeth are in contact. (2) With belts, the angle subtended at the center of a pulley by the part of the circumference in contact with the belt. 2. Physics. The angle which the extreme edge of the surface of a fluid makes with a solid surface with which it is in contact. G. & T. Tech. and Sci. Dict.—a. of defense, an angle in a fortification, formed by the line of defense and a diverging flank.—a. of depression, the angle of a gun's axis with the horizon when it is aimed below the horizon.—a. of descent, the angle between the tangent to the trajectory of a projectile and the horizontal plane passing through the point of first graze or impact.—a. of deviation. 1. Bot. The angle made by a leaf or branch on its upper side with the axis, or by a root on its lower side with the same axis. deviating a.‡ 2. Angle of displacement.—a. of dip, see ANGLE OF INCLINATION.—a. of divergence (Bot.), in leaf-arrangement, the angle between the two nearest leaves of a spiral or whorl, as measured on the stem. angular divergence‡.—a. of elevation, the angle between the axis of a gun and the line of aim.—a. of flexure. Engin. 1. The angle through which one end of a shaft turns relatively to the other end when the shaft is subjected to torsion. 2. The angle which any line in a body makes with its original direction when the body is subjected to torsion. G. & T. Tech. and Sci. Dict.—a. of heel (Nav. Arch.), the angle subtended by the mast and the plane of the horizon when the ship heels over by the force of the wind, or otherwise.—a. of incidence. 1. The angle between the line of direction of anything (as a ray of light) striking a surface and a perpendicular to that surface drawn to the point of contact. 2. Aero. The angle at which the air strikes a surface, measured from and from the chord of WRIGHT.—a. of incli- which a magnetic nee-zon.—a. of lag (Elec.), ternating current func-terior and inferior borders of the lower jaw. gonIac a.‡.—a. of parallelism, in non-Euclidean geometry, the angle made by one parallel with a transversal at right angles to the other: in Lobachevski's system it is a function (II) of the intercepted length (p) of the transversal.—a. of prognathism (Craniom.), an angle by which the projection of the jaws can be measured, as by drawing lines from the tips of the incisor teeth tangent to the forehead and chin.—a. of reflection, the angle between the line of direction of anything (as a ray of light) reflected from a surface and a perpendicular drawn to the surface at the point of reflection.—a. of refraction, the angle that a ray forms with the normal after undergoing refraction at a surface.—a. of relief (Engin.), the angle between the back edge of a tool and the material it is cutting. G. & T. Tech. and Sci. Dict.—a. of repose. Civ. Engin. 1. The maximum angle with the horizontal at which a mass of material, as in a cut or embankment, will lie without sliding. 2. The maximum angle with the horizontal of the plane on which a vehicle can stand without being chocked.—a. of sight, or a. of vision, the angle between the line of sight and the line of fire.—a. of the vertical (Astron.), the angle occurring anywhere between the inclination of gravity and a line parallel to the center of the earth, which forms the difference between the astronomic and the geocentric latitudes, the latter being invariably less than the former. In latitude 45° this angle amounts to 11½′, which is the maximum. At both the poles and the equator it is represented by zero.—a. of view (Phot.), the angle subtended at the second equivalent point of the lens by the base of the plate used. Either base or diagonal of plate may be used in measuring this angle.—a.-plate, n. A plate having an L-shaped cross-section: in lathes and other machine tools, an L-shaped plate provided with holes or slots, through which bolts may be passed for clamping work to face-plate or chuck.—a.-pod, n. A vine of the genus Gonolobus of the milkweed family (Asclepiadaceæ), especially G. laxle of the southern United States: named from the angular fruit.—a.-rib, n. A curved timber between those parts of an arched ceiling where the planes, if continued until they meet, would form an angle.—a.-shaft, n. An angle-bead enriched, as with a capital or base.—a.-staff, n. An angular strip of wood protecting a salient angle of a wall. See ANGLE-BEAD.—a.-steel, n. Steel rolled in bars having an L-shaped transverse section.—a.-stone, n. In architecture, a quoin.—a.-tie, n. A tie in an angle of a frame structure.—axial a. 1. The angle between the two secondary optic axes of a biaxial crystal. 2. The angle between any two crystallographic axes.—Brocard a., the angle (denoted by ω) through which a plane triangle must be rotated about its vertices in turn, in order that its sides may contain a point within called a Brocard point: H. Brocard, French geometer; in the case of a polygon, the complement of half the angle subtended by a side and having its vertex at the symmedian point.—complementary angles, two whose sum is a right angle, as AOB and BOC. See fig. 1, p. 108.—concluded a. (Surv.), the common mean of the mean values of several observations of any angle.—corresponding angles, angles made by a secant with parallels, whose sides lie in the same direction from the vertices, as E and C, A and G, or F and D (fig. 2, p. 108).—dihedral a. 1. The relation of two intersecting planes, as measured by the difference in direction of perpendiculars to them. 2. Aero. The angle of the wings of an aeroplane when the tips are elevated above the center, forming a broad V. ORVILLE WRIGHT.—direction a. (Math.), the angle produced by a given line having an axis of reference.—eccentric a. (of a point on an ellipse), the angle made with the major axis by a radius of the circumscribing circle drawn to the point where a perpendicular to that axis through the given point meets the circle.—exterior a. 1. An angle formed by a side of a polygon and an adjacent side produced, as at A. See fig. 3, p. 108. 2. One of the four outside angles (E, F, G, H, in fig. 2, p. 108, formed by a transversal cutting two parallels.—gliding a. (Aero.), the least angle of descent at which an aeroplane can maintain flying speed by gravity alone. ORVILLE WRIGHT.—gonIac a., same as ANGLE OF MANDIBLE.—hitch a. (Ironwork.), an angle, generally a section cut from a standard angle, or a clip or bent plate, used to connect girders with beams or columns.—inscribed a., the angle between chords from a point on a circle.—interior a., one of the four inside angles (A, B, C, D, in fig. 2, p. 108), made by a transversal cutting two parallels. internal a.‡.—masthead a. (Naut.), an angle subtended by a ship's mast, used in conjunction with the height of the masthead above the water-line to determine the ship's distance.—meter a. (Mcd.), that angle which each visual axis makes with the median plane when the eyes are fixed on a point one meter distant.—nautical a. [Archaic], an instrument devised to show a vessel's departure, meridional difference, etc.—negative a. (Aero.), an angle measured below the horizontal.—negative a. of incidence (Aero.), an angle at which the pressure of the air is on the concave side of a curved surface, altho the air meets the surface from the convex side as measured from the chord of the curve (a peculiarity of curved surfaces). ORVILLE WRIGHT. Compare ANGLE OF INCIDENCE.—optic a. 1. The visual angle, or angle formed at the organ of sight by two lines drawn from the extremities of an object of vision. 2. The angle formed by the visual axes of the eyes, varying with the distance of the object beheld. 3. In a biaxial crystal, the angle between the optic axes.—outward a., an exterior angle.—parallactic a. (Astron.), the angle at a star made by a line from the zenith and another from the pole.—permanent a. (Gunnery), the fixed angle with a rifled gun's axis at which the sights are adjusted, to allow for the projectile's "drift" or deviation from a straight line.—polyhedral a., a solid angle formed by the meeting of more than three planes; any angle of a polyhedron except a dihedral or trihedral angle.—position a. (Astron.), the angle that a line between two stars makes with the meridian, counted from the north point through the east.—reentering a. (Fort.), an angle in a fortification the point of which is turned toward the defended place, as distinguished from a salient or projecting angle.—reentrant a., an angle whose vertex is directed toward the back or inside of the figure of which it forms a part.—solid a., the figure formed by plane or curved surfaces passing through a point and intersecting a plane not containing the point in a closed curve or closed broken line: measured by the area intercepted on a sphere of unit radius described about the point as a center.—spherical a., the angle formed by two great circles at their point of intersection and measured by the angle between their tangents at that point.—supplementary angles, two angles whose sum makes a straight angle, as AOB and BOD in fig. 1, p. 108. supplemental angles‡.—tanchord a., in a circle, any angle between a tangent and a chord from the point of tangency.—trihedral a., an angle formed by the joining of three different planes at one point.—view a. (Phot.), same as ANGLE OF VIEW.—visual a., see OPTIC ANGLE.

an'ha-lin, 1 an'ha-lin; 2 ăn'ha-lĭn, n. Chem. An alkaloid substance ($C_{10}H_{17}O_2N$) obtained from certain species of Anhalonium. [< ANHALONIUM.] an'ha-linet.

an"ha-lon'ı-din, 1 an"he-len'ı-din; 2 ăn"ha-lŏn'i-dĭn, n. Chem. An alkaloid substance ($C_{12}H_{15}O_3N$) obtained from certain species of anhalonium. [< ANHALONIUM.] an"ha-lon'ı-dinet.

an-hal'o-nine, } 1 an-hal'o-nin; 2 ăn-hăl'o-nĭn, n. Chem.
an-hal'o-nin², } A salt ($C_{12}H_{15}NO_3HCl$) of an alkaloid from a cactus (Anhalonium lewini) of Texas and northern Mexico, and related species: used in medicine as a cardiac and respiratory stimulant. [< ANHALONIUM.]

An"ha-lo'ni-um, 1 an"he-lō'nı-um; 2 ăn"ha-lō'ni-ŭm, n. Bot. A genus of succulent top-shaped plants of the cactus family, the flat aerial portion above ground bearing angular spineless tubercles. The 4 or 5 species belong to Mexico, with one (A. engelmanni, called living rock) in Texas. See ANHALONINE. [< Gr. an-, not, + halōnion, disk.]

an"har-mon'ic, 1 an"hȧr-mon'ik; 2 ăn"hăr-mŏn'ic, a. Math. Non-harmonic. [< F. anharmonique, < Gr. an- priv.; and see HARMONIC.] an"har-mon'i-cal‡.—an-harmonic property, a property connected with an anharmonic ratio.—a. ratio, see under RATIO.—a. sextic, an equation determining the six cross-ratios of the roots of one of the fourth degree.

an"he-do'ni-a, 1 an"hi-dō'ni-ə; 2 ăn"he-dō'ni-a, n. Psychol. A morbid condition in which the sufferer loses all interest in matters which intimately concern him: term proposed by Th. Ribot in his Psychologie des Sentiments p. 54. [< Gr. an-, not, + hēdonē, pleasure.]

an-he'dron, 1 an-hī'drən; 2 ăn-hē'dron, n. [-DRONS, -DRA, 1 -dranz, -dra; 2 -drons, -dra, pl.] Petrol. An individual mineral or crystal in a granular igneous rock, bounded by the surfaces of preexisting adjoining crystals and lacking in the crystal faces proper to itself; an allotriomorphic or xenomorphic crystal: contrasted with phenocryst. [< Gr. an- priv. + hedra, seat.]—an-he'dral, a. Petrol. Without crystal faces; xenomorphic; allotriomorphic.

an"he-la'tion, 1 an"hi-lē'shən; 2 ăn"he-lā'shon, n. 1. Pathol. Shortness of breath; difficult respiration, as in asthma. 2. [Rare.] Earnest desire; eagerness; aspiration. [< F. anhélation, < L. anhelatio(n-), < an- (< ambi-), around, + halo, breathe.]—an-hele't, vi. To pant with desire.—an-he'lous, a. [Rare.] Pathol. Short-breathed; panting.

an-hem"a-to'sis, 1 an-hem"ə-tō'sis; 2 ăn-hĕm"a-tō'sis, an-hæm"a-to'sis, n. Pathol. Deficient blood-formation; anematosis. [< AN-, not, + HEMATOSIS.]

an"hi-dro'sis, 1 an"hi-drō'sis; 2 ăn"hi-drō'sis, n. Pathol. Morbid deficiency of perspiration. [< Gr. an- priv. + hidrōs, perspiration.] an"hy-dro'sis‡; an"i-dro'sis‡.—an"hi-drot'ic, an"i-drot'ic, a.

an'hi-ma, 1 an'hi-mə; 2 ăn'hi-ma, n. [Braz.] 1. The horned screamer. 2. [A-] Ornith. A genus typical of Anhimidæ.—An-him'i-dæ, n. pl. Ornith. The Palamedeidæ.—an'hi-mid, n.—an"hi-mol'de-æ, n. pl. Ornith. The Palamedeidæ as a superfamily.—an"hi-mol'de-an, a. & n.

an-hin'ga, 1 an-hiŋ'gə; 2 ăn-hiŋ'ga, n. [S. Am.] 1. The snake-bird or darter. 2. [A-] Ornith. A genus typical of Anhingidæ.—An-hin'gi-dæ, n. pl. Ornith. The Plotidæ.—an-hin'gid, n.—an-hin'goid, a.

an-his'tous, 1 an-his'tus; 2 ăn-his'tŭs, a. Without definite structure: said of certain membranes. [< Gr. an-, priv. + histos, web.] an-his'tic‡.

an-hun'gered, a. [Archaic.] Hungry. a-hun'gry‡.

An"hwei', 1 ān"hwē'; 2 ăn"hwe', n. A province of E. central China; 54,826 sq. m.; capital, Anking. An"hui'‡.

an-hy'drate, 1 an-hai'drēt; 2 ăn-hȳ'drāt, vt. [-DRAT"ED; -DRAT'ING.] To free from water; dehydrate.—an"hy-dra'tion, n.

an"hy-dre'mi-a, 1 an"hai-drī'mi-ə; 2 ăn"hȳ-drē'mi-a, n. Pathol. A deficiency of serum in the blood. [< Gr. an- priv.+ hydōr, water, + haima, blood.] an"hy-dræ'mi-a‡.

an-hy'drid, 1 an-hai'drid, -drid or -droid; 2 ăn-hȳ'-an-hy'dride, drid, -drid or -drīd, n. 1. Chem. An oxid which becomes an acid when water is added, or is regarded as an acid from which the water has been removed, and which combines with basic oxids to form salts. 2. Same as ORGANIC ANHYDRID. [< Gr. anydros; see ANHYDROUS.]—mellitic anhydrid, same as HYDROCOUMARIN.—organic a., a body derived from an organic chemical substance by the elimination of water.

an-hy'drite, 1 an-hai'drait; 2 ăn-hȳ'drīt, n. Mineral. A white or nearly white calcium sulfate ($CaSO_4$), that crystallizes in the orthorhombic system.

an-hy"dro-my-e'li-a, 1 an-hai'dro-mai-i'li-ə; 2 ăn-hȳ'-dro-mȳ-ē'li-a, n. Pathol. Abnormal lack of fluid about the spinal cord. [< Gr. anydros (see ANHYDROUS) + myelos, marrow.]

an-hy'drous, 1 an-hai'drus; 2 ăn-hȳ'drŭs, a. 1. Chem. Destitute of water; especially, destitute of water of crystallization. 2. Dried up; withered, as a region or plant. [< Gr. anydros, < an- priv. + hydōr (hydr-), water.] an-hy'dric‡.

a'ni, 1 ā'ni; 2 ā'ni, n. [Braz.] A crotophagine bird of tropical and subtropical America; a keel-billed cuckoo. The general color is black with metallic reflections. Several birds sometimes use the same nest. The common ani (Crotophaga ani) is found from Florida southward, the groove-billed ani (C. sulcirostris) from Texas southward. a'not.

The Common Ani. 1/4

A-ni'a, 1 ə-nai'ə; 2 a-ni'a, n. Bib. (Douai). [Chron. vii, 19.

A-ni'am, 1 ə-nai'am; 2 a-ni'ăm, n. Bib. I a-ni'ba, 1 ə-nai'bə; 2 a-ni'ba, n. Bot. A genus of large laurel-like American flowering trees producing an edible fruit.

A"ni-bal', n. [Sp.] See HANNIBAL.

A"niche', 1 ə'nish'; 2 ā'niçh', n. A town in Nord department, France.

an"i-con'ic, 1 an"ai-kon'ik; 2 ăn"i-cŏn'ic, a. Having no images; as, the aniconic worship of polydæmonism. [< Gr. an- priv. + ICONIC.]

an'i-cut, 1 an'i-kut; 2 ăn'i-cŭt, n. [E. Ind.] A dam across a river, to regulate the water-supply in irrigation.

a-nid'i-an, 1 ə-nid'i-ən; 2 a-nid'i-an, a. Terat. Having no distinct or definite form; shapeless.

an-id"i-o-mat'ic, a. [Rare.] Not idiomatic. -i-cal‡.

an"i-dro'sis, n. Anhidrosis.

An"i-el'i-dæ, 1 an"i-el'i-dī; 2 ăn"i-ĕl'i-dē, n. pl. Herp. A family of lizards with a limbless snake-like body and the nasal shield extending to the margin of the jaw. An"i-el'la, n. (t. g.)—an"i-el'lid, n.—an"i-el'loid, a.

An"i-el-loi'de-a, 1 an"i-e-loi'di-ə; 2 ăn"i-ĕ-lŏi'de-a, n. pl. A superfamily of lizards having concavo-convex vertebral bodies, no postorbital nor postfrontal arches, no interorbital septum, and no columella, including Anteltidæ. [< ANIELLA + Gr. eidos, form.]

a-nigh', 1 ə-nai'; 2 a-ni', adv. & prep. Near; nigh; nigh to.

a-night', 1 ə-nait'; 2 a-nit', adv. At night; nightly. a-nights'‡.

an'il, 1 an'il; 2 ăn'il, n. 1. A West-Indian indigo-plant (Indigofera anil). 2. The dye indigo. [F., < Ar. an-nīl, < al, the, + nīl, indigo, < Sans. nīlē, indigo, < nīla, dark-blue.] a-nil'la‡.

a"ni-lao', 1 a'ni-lau'; 2 ā'ni-lou', n. 1. [Guam.] A shrub or small tree (Grewia multiflora) of the linden family, bearing fleshy drupes the size of a small pea. 2. [P. I.] An inferior small timber-tree (Columbia serratifolia) allied to and resembling the preceding, but having 3- to 5-winged nutlets as fruit. Both trees yield a fibrous inner bark. an"gi-lao'‡.

A-ni-lao', n. A town in Iloilo province, Panay, P. I.

an'ile, 1 an'il or -ail; 2 ăn'il or -īl, a. Like an old woman; feeble-minded. [< L. anilis, < anus, old woman.]

a-nil'ic, 1 ə-nil'ik; 2 a-nil'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from anil.—anilic acid, nitrosalicylic acid.

an'i-lid, 1 an'i-lid, -lid or -laid; 2 ăn'i-lid, -lid or -lid, n. an'i-lide, Chem. Phenylamid.

an'i-lin, 1 an'i-lin, -lin, -lin, or -lain; 2 ăn'i-lĭn, -lin, -lin, or -lin, a. Of, pertaining to, or derived from anilin.—anilin black, blue, red, etc., see under BLACK, etc.

an'i-lin, n. A colorless oily compound (C_6H_7N), the base from which many of the coal-tar dyes are made. It may be regarded as derived from ammonia (NH_3) by replacing one molecule of hydrogen with the radical phenyl (C_6H_5), and is hence considered chemically as phenylamin ($C_6H_5NH_2$). Anilin was originally obtained in the distillation of indigo, but is now chiefly made from nitrobenzene. Called also crystallin, cyanol, benzidam. [< ANIL.] a-nil'i-a‡.

an'i-lism, 1 an'i-lizm; 2 ăn'i-lĭsm, n. Pathol. Anilin poisoning, affecting workers exposed to the fumes of anilin dyes. [< ANILIN.] an'i-lin-ism‡.

a-nil'i-ty, 1 ə-nil'i-ti; 2 a-nil'i-ty, n. The state of being anile; old-womanishness.

A"nil-le'ro, 1 ā'nil-ye'ro; 2 ā'nil-ye'ro, n. In Spain, one of a party which, in the revolution of 1820–1823, sought to effect a reconciliation between the people and the crown.

an"il-py'rin, 1 an"il-pai'rin; 2 ăn"il-pȳ'rin, n. Chem. A white crystalline powder made by fusing antipyrin and acetanilid, one part of acetanilid and two parts of antipyrin. It is used in the treatment of influenza and rheumatism. [< -anil- in ACETANILID + -pyrin in antipyrin, < ANTI- + Gr. pyressō, be feverish.] an"i-il-py'rin‡.

A'nim, 1 ē'nim; 2 ā'nim, n. Bib. Josh. xv, 50.

Anim., abbr. Animato.

an'i-ma, 1 an'i-ma; 2 ăn'i-ma, n. [-MÆ, 1 -mī; 2 -mē, pl.] [L.] The vital principle; source of action and manifestation; soul; life.—anima bruta, the animal soul. See under SOUL.—a. humana, the soul of man.—a. mundi, the soul of the world, a supposed intermediate living principle below the Creator and above the world. See ANIMISM. Called also archeus by Paracelsus, and plastic nature by Cudworth.

The doctrine of anima mundi, as held by Stoics and Stratonicians, is closely allied to pantheism.

an"i-ma-bil'i-ty, 1 an"i-mə-bil'i-ti; 2 ăn"i-ma-bil'i-ty, n. [Rare.] Capability of being animated. an"i-ma-bi(e-ness)‡.—an"i-ma-bl(e), a.

an"i-mad-ver'sion, 1 an"i-mad-vūr'shən; 2 ăn"i-măd-vĕr'shon, n. 1. The utterance of criticism or censure; a censorious comment or reflection.

Some day, we may translate Friedrich Schlegel's Essay on Meister, by way of contrast to our English animadversions on that subject. CARLYLE Essays, Goethe in vol. i, p. 237. [H. M. & CO.]

2. [Archaic.] The act of taking judicial observation or notice of an offense; a penal visitation. 3. [Archaic.] The faculty of observing; notice; monition; warning.

Syn.: blame, censure, check, chiding, comment, criticism, disapproval, rebuke, reflection, reprehension, reproof. Blame, censure, and disapproval may either be felt or uttered; comment, criticism, rebuke, reflection, reprehension, and reproof are always expressed. Comment and criticism may be favorable as well as censorious; they imply no superiority or authority on the part of him who utters them; nor do reflection or reprehension, which are simply turning the mind back upon what is disapproved. Reprehension is supposed to be calm and just, and with good intent; it is therefore a serious matter, however mild, and is capable of great force, as expressed in the phrase severe reprehension. Reflection is often from mere ill feeling, and is likely to be more personal and less impartial than reprehension; we often speak of unkind or unjust reflections. Rebuke, literally a stopping of the mouth, is administered to a forward or hasty person; reproof is administered to one intentionally or deliberately wrong; both words imply authority in the reprover. "Nathan reproved King David for his heinous offences against his Maker; our Saviour rebuked Peter for his presumptuous mode of speech." CRABB English Synonymes. See 2 Sam. xii, and Mark viii, 33; compare verse 32: that Peter "began to rebuke" Jesus was a presumptuous claim of authority, and a part of his offense. Animadversion is censure of a high, authoritative, and somewhat formal kind. Rebuke may be given at the outset, or in the midst of an action; animadversion, reflection, reprehension, reproof, always follow the act. Check is allied to rebuke, and given before or during action; chiding is nearer to reproof, but with more of personal bitterness and less of authority.—Ant.: applause, approbation, approval, commendation, encomium, eulogy, panegyric, praise.—Prep.: on or upon.—an"i-mad-ver'sal, n. The faculty of perceiving; consciousness.—an"i-mad-ver'siv(es. [Rare.] I. a. Attentive; perceptive. II†. n. A perciplent agent.—an"i-mad-ver'siv(e-ness‡, n. The characteristic quality or the power of animadversion.

an"i-mad-vert', 1 an'i-mad-vūrt'; 2 ăn'i-măd-vĕrt', v. I. i. 1. To pass criticism or censure; make censorious remarks.

My old friend thinking himself obliged . . . to animadvert upon the morals of the place. ADDISON Spectator May 20, 1712.

2. To take note or cognizance; turn one's attention.

As a speech in the House, the House could alone animadvert upon it. COLERIDGE Table Talk Jan. 1, 1823.

3. [Archaic.] To take notice judicially.

II†. t. To notice; observe. [< L. animadverto, < animus, mind, + ad, to, + verto, turn.]—an"i-mad-vert'er, n.

an'i-mal, 1 an'i-məl; 2 ăn'i-mal, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or derived from an animal or animals; as, animal tissue; animal intelligence; animal food.

Some naturalists . . . have divided the whole organic world into three kingdoms, the Human, the Animal, and the Vegetable. DARWIN Descent of Man vol. i, p. 179. [A. 1871.]

2. Pertaining to the distinctively sentient or fleshly part of man and its attributes, as opposed to the mental or spiritual part; as, our animal nature; animal appetites.

In men prone to cruelty . . . there is an animal expression strongly prevalent in the countenances.

BULWER-LYTTON Eugene Aram bk. v, p. 392. [H. & S.]

3†. Relating to the will. [< L. animalis, < anima, breath.] Syn.: see BRUTISH.—animal aneretic, the gastric juice and vaccine lymph.—a. black, fine carbon obtained by calcining bones, and used largely in filtering. a. charcoal‡.—a. cellulose, a cellulose-like material found in testing certain tunicates.—a. chemistry (Chem.), a branch of organic chemistry that treats of animal matter.—a. food, any edible part or product of an animal; in a limited sense the flesh only.—a. force, muscular power or energy.—a. heat, the heat generated by the chemical processes constantly going on in an animal organism and kept nearly uniform.—a. kingdom, one of the prime divisions of nature; according to most naturalists, embracing all animals. See NATURE.

Philos.* Subtle matter supposed to permeate the nerve-pores and to serve as the agent of communication between the brain and the periphery.—a. strength, bodily strength.—an'i-mal-ness, n. Animality.

an'i-mal, n. 1. A sentient living organism broadly distinguished from a plant by incapacity to convert inorganic into organic matter; a sentient living being. Animals may usually be distinguished by taking food into a digestive cavity and by the power of voluntary motion, but it is impossible to establish absolute demarcation between plants and animals, the lowest forms of both lacking more and more of their respective characteristics and being distinguishable chiefly by their relations to other organisms. See ANIMAL KINGDOM; MAMMALIA: ZOOLOGY.

The most essential thing of all, that which makes every animal an animal, is that it has some mode or other of reproduction, of motion, and of respiration.

LOTZE System Philos. tr. by Bosanquet, p. 31. [CL. P. 1887.]

2. In a restricted sense, a sentient creature inferior to man; a brute: often limited to mammals.

He [Plutarch] was probably the first writer who advocated very strongly humanity to animals, on the broad ground of universal benevolence. LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. i, p. 258. [A. 1886.]

3. A human being in whom the animal nature is predominant. 4. pl. [Colloq.] Domestic quadrupeds, especially horses and oxen used in harness or under saddle. 5. [Slang, U. S.] A newly arrived cadet at the Military Academy at West Point. [L., < anima, breath.]

Syn.: beast, brute, creature. An animal is a sentient being, distinct from inanimate matter and from vegetable life on the one side and from mental and spiritual existence on the other. Thus man is properly classified as an animal. But because the animal life is the lowest and rudest part of his being and that which he shares with inferior creatures, to call any individual man an animal is to imply that the animal nature has undue supremacy, and so is deep condemnation or utter insult. The brute is the animal viewed as dull to all finer feeling; the beast, which, according to the Greek derivation of the word, is the feeding creature, is looked upon as a being of appetites. To call a man a brute is to imply that he is unfeeling and cruel; to call him a beast is to indicate that he is vilely sensual. We speak of the cruel father as a brute to his children; of the drunkard as making a beast of himself. So firmly are these figurative senses established that we now incline to avoid applying brute or beast to any creature, as a horse or dog, for which we have any affection; we prefer in such cases the word animal. Creature is a word of wide signification, including all the living things that God has created—plants, animals, angels, or men. The animals of a region are collectively called its fauna.—Ant.: angel, man, mind, soul, spirit, vegetable.—an'i-mal-flow"er, n. A sea-anemone or other radiate resembling or likened to a flower.—a.-worship, n. Same as ZOOLATRY.—an"i-mal"i-cul'ture, n. [Rare.] The breeding and care of animals.

an"i-mal'cu-lar, 1 an'i-mal'kiu-lər; 2 ăn'i-măl'cū-lar, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or like animalcules. 2. Of or pertaining to animalculism. an"i-mal'cu-lin(es‡; an"i-mal'cu-lous‡.

an"i-mal'cule, 1 an'i-mal'kiūl; 2 ăn'i-măl'cūl, n. 1. An animal of microscopic or almost microscopic smallness, as a wheel-animalcule, bear-animalcule, infusorian, or the like. Some animalcules (such as the desmids) have been demonstrated to be motile plants. 2†. Any small animal, as a fly, goat, etc.

an"i-mal'cu-lism, 1 an'i-mal'kiu-lizm; 2 ăn'i-măl'cū-lĭsm, n. 1. The theory that animalcules are the cause or source of vital phenomena and also of disease. 2. The theory that the whole of the embryo is contained in the spermatozoon.

an"i-mal'cu-list, 1 an'i-mal'kiu-list; 2 ăn'i-măl'cū-list, n. 1. One who studies animalcules. 2. A believer in animalculism.

an"i-mal'cu-lum, 1 an'i-mal'kiu-lum; 2 ăn'i-măl'cū-lŭm, n. [-LA, 1 -lə; 2 -la, pl.] An animalcule. [Dim. of L. animal, < anima, breath.]

an'i-mal-hood, n. [Rare.] The condition of the lower animals.

An"i-ma'li-a, 1 an'i-mē'li-ə; 2 ăn'i-mā'li-a, n. pl. Zool. Animals generally; the animal kingdom.

an"i-mal'ic, a. [Rare.] Of or pertaining to animals; having the characteristics of animals. an"i-ma'li-an‡.

an'i-mal-ism, 1 an'i-məl-izm; 2 ăn'i-mal-ĭsm, n. 1. The state or condition of a mere animal, actuated by sensual instincts and appetites only, without intellectual or moral qualities.

Stiff-necked, rebellious, incorrigible human nature, ever showing its animalism and brutishness, let the wretches be forever accursed! STANLEY In Darkest Africa vol. i, p. 4. [S. 1890.]

2. Animal activity. 3. Physiol. Animalculism. 4. [Rare.] A human being who lives or acts as a mere animal. 5. The belief that man is entirely animal, having no soul or spirit.

an'i-mal-ist, 1 an'i-məl-ist; 2 ăn'i-mal-ĭst, n. 1. A sensualist. 2. A painter or sculptor who makes animals the principal subject of his art. 3. Physiol. An animalculist.

a-nis'i-dine, } -dĭn or -dın, n. Chem. Either of the isomeric, aromatic bases ortho- and para-amidophenol-methylether ($C_6H_4(NH_2)OCH_3$) derived from anisol. The ortho-product is a yellowish oil, the para-, a crystalline solid. [< ANISE.]

an'i-sil, 1 an'ı-sil; 2 ăn'i-sĭl, n. Org. Chem. A yellow crystalline compound ($C_{16}H_{14}O_4$), made by subjecting anisoin to the chemical action of nitric acid or Fehling's solution. [< ANISE.]—an"i-sil'ic, a.— anisilic acid, an acid ($C_{15}H_{16}O_6$) prepared by treating anisil with caustic potash.

an'i-so-, 1 an'ı-so-; 2 ăn'i-so-. Derived from Greek anisos, unequal (< an- priv. + isos, equal): a combining form.— An"i-so-bran'chi-a, n. pl. Conch. A section of chiastoneurous gastropods with one gill (generally the right) more developed. An"i-so-bran"chi-a'ta‡.— an"i-so-bran'chi-ate, a.— an"i-so'bry-ous, a. See ANISODYNAMOUS.— an"i-so-car'pic, a. With carpels dissimilar, or fewer than the stamens or floral envelops. an"i-so-car'pous‡.— an"i-so-cer'cal, a. Ich. Having the caudal vertebræ bent out of the median line; not isocercal.

an"i-so-cne'mic, 1 an'ai-so-nī'mik; 2 ăn'i-so-nē'mic, a. Referring to a pair of unequal mesenteries in anthozoans: opposed to isocnemic.

an"i-so-co'ri-a, n. Pathol. Inequality in the size of the pupils of the eye.— an"i-so-cy'clic, n. Mil. An instrument used formerly during the medieval period for shooting arrows, having a strong actuating spring which when drawn back for use assumed roughly the arc of a spiral.— an"i-so-dac'tyl. I. a. Anisodactylous. II. n. An anisodactylous bird or mammal. an"i-so-dac'tylet.— An"i-so-dac'ty-la, n. pl. Mam. A division of ungulates with uneven toes, including the hippopotamus and most perissodactyls except the horse.— An"i-so-dac'ty-li, n. pl. Ornith. A group or suborder of picarian birds, variously limited.— an"i-so-dac'ty-lous, a. Having unequal toes. (1) Ornith. Having three toes turned forward, as certain picarian birds. (2) Of or pertaining to the Anisodactyla. an"i-so-dac'tyl-ic‡.— an"i-so-dont, a. Having teeth of different sizes and irregularly spaced: said of serpents.— an"i-so-dyn'a-mous, a. Monocotyledonous: a term proposed on the supposition that the single cotyledon is the result of unequal development.— an"i-sog'a-my, n. Biol. The union of widely differing male and female gametes or reproductive cells.— an"i-sog'a-mous, a.— an"i-sog'na-thous, a. Having the molar teeth of the two jaws unequal; not isognathous.— an"i-sog'na-thism, n.— an"i-sog'y-nous, a. Bot. Not having the same number of carpels as of sepals. — an"i-so-hy"per-cy-to'sis, n. In hematology, an excess of white blood-corpuscles with abnormal percentage relations of the various nuclear forms.

a-nis'o-in, 1 ə-nis'o-in; 2 a-nĭs'o-in, n. Chem. A crystalline alcohol ($C_{16}H_{16}O_4$) belonging to the ketonic group, made by condensing two molecules of anisic aldehyde. [< ANISE.]

an'i-sol, 1 an'ı-sōl or -sol; 2 ăn'i-sōl or -sŏl, n. Chem. A colorless mobile liquid (C_7H_8O), derived variously, as by the action of barium hydrate on anisic acid. [< ANISO- + -OL].

an-i"so-mer'ic, a. Chem. Composed of the same elements but in different proportions: opposed to isomeric.— an"i-som'er-ous, a. 1. Bot. Having an unequal number of parts in different circles: said of flowers. 2. Zool. Having the ridges of contiguous molar teeth increasing by more than one, as in mastodons.— an"i-so-met'ric, a. Not isometric; specif., dissimilar in the direction of the different axes, as some crystals.— an"i-so-me-tro'pi-a, n. Pathol. Inequality in the refracting power of the eyes.— a-ni"so-met'rope, n.— an"i-so-me-trop'ic, a.— A-ni"so-my-a'ri-a, n. pl. A group of acephalan mollusks, classed between the Monomyaria, having only one abductor muscle, and the Dimyaria, having the normal number of two abductor muscles fully developed. The anterior adductors of the Anisomyaria attain a greater development than the posterior, and these muscular differences of the Monomyaria and Anisomyaria, formerly regarded as a basis of classification, are now conceded to be different stages in the degeneration of the musculature.— a-ni"so-my-a'ri-an, a. & n.— an"i-so-pet'a-lous, a. Bot. Having the petals unequal.— an"i-so-phyl'lous, a. Bot. 1. Having the leaves of a pair of unequal size or unlike form. 2. Having leaves differing in size and character on different sides of a non-vertical stem or twig.— an-i'so-phyl"ly, n. Bot. The property of having different leaves; particularly, the possession of leaves of different size and character on different sides of plagiotropic shoots.— an"i-so'pi-a, n. Pathol. Inequality of sight in the eyes.— An"i-so-pleu'ra, n. pl. Conch. A division of gastropods not bilaterally symmetrical, including all but the chitons.— an"i-so-pleu'ral, a. Having unequal sides; not bilaterally symmetrical, as the Anisopleura. an"i-so-pleu'rous‡.— An"i-sop'o-da, n. pl. Crust. A suborder or tribe of tetradecapods with 4 anterior and 3 posterior pairs of legs and without branchial appendages. — an-i'so-pod, a. & n.— an"i-sop'o-dal, an"i-sop'o-dous, a.— an"i-so-pog'o-nous, a. Ornith. Having one web or vane differing from the other: said of feathers.— an"i-sop'ter-ous, a. Having unequal wings, as certain fruits.— an-i'so-spore, n. Protoz. A form of spore developed by colonial radiolarians, consisting of microspores and macrospores which probably copulate: opposed to isospore.— an"i-so-stem'o-nous, a. Bot. Having fewer stamens than petals or corolla-lobes.— an"i-so-sthen'ic, a. Having unequal strength, as muscles.— An-i"so-tre'mus, n. A genus of fishes of the family Hæmulonidæ, represented by numerous species in the American tropics. A. surinamensis, the pompon, is the most common species. All the species have unusually broad bodies, and many of them are remarkable for their brilliant coloring. [tropic crystal.

an-i'so-trope, 1 an-ai'so-trōp; 2 ăn-i'so-trōp, n. Any anisotropic substance.— an"i-so-trop'ic, 1 an'ai-so-trop'ik; 2 ăn'i-so-trŏp'ic, a. 1. Having different properties along lines of different directions, as when a fibrous substance conducts heat more rapidly along its fibers than across them: opposed to isotropic; as, an anisotropic medium; an anisotropic conductor. 2. Responding unequally to external influences, as plant-organs. 3. Zool. Possessing an inherent axis of development. 4. Physics. Having different physical properties in different directions, especially with regard to the transmission of light, as in some minerals. [< ANISO- + Gr. trepō, turn.] an"i-sot'ro-pal‡; an'i-so-trope‡; an-i"so-trop'i-cal‡; an"i-sot'ro-pous‡.— an"i-so-trop'i-cal-ly, adv.

an"i-sot'ro-py, 1 an'ai-set'ro-pı; 2 ăn'i-sŏt'ro-py, n. The property of being anisotropic. an"i-sot'ro-pism‡.

an'i-syl, 1 an'ı-sil; 2 ăn'i-sĭl, n. Org. Chem. The univalent radical $CH_3OC_6H_4$, sometimes also the radical $CH_3OC_6H_4CO$, more properly called anisoyl. Anisol is the parent substance. [< ANISE + -YL.]

an-ith'er, 1 an-ith'ər; 2 ăn-ith'er, a. & pron. [Scot.] Another.

SYN.: advertise, communicate, declare, enunciate, give notice of, give out, herald, make known, notify, proclaim, promulgate, propound, publish, report, reveal. We may announce that which has occurred or that which is to occur, but the word is chiefly used in the anticipative sense: we announce a book when it is in press, a guest when he arrives. We advertise our business, communicate our intentions, enunciate our views; we notify an individual, give notice to the public. Declare has often an authoritative force; to declare war is to cause war to be, where before there may have been only hostilities; we say declare war, proclaim peace. We propound a question or an argument, promulgate the views of a sect or party, or the decision of a court, etc. We report an interview, reveal a secret, herald the coming of some distinguished person or great event. Publish, in popular usage, is becoming closely restricted to the sense of announcing or issuing through the press; we announce a book that is to be published. See PUBLISH; SPEAK.—ANT.: bury, conceal, hide, hush, keep back, suppress, withhold.—Prep.: the event was announced to the family by telegraph.

an'swer, n. 1. A reply or response, especially one that is sufficient, correct, or appropriate, as in denial of charges or in refutation of arguments; as, the answer to a letter; an answer to an objection. 2. Any action in return or in kind; retaliation; as, war was the answer to aggression. 3. Mus. The correlative of the subject; the reply of one portion of a phrase to another or of one instrument to another. 4. Fencing. A return thrust. 5. A correct result of a calculation; solution; as, the answer to a problem; the answer to a riddle. 6. Whist. The dummy's hand exposed after the dealer has declared. 7. Law. (1) The written defense of a defendant in an action to charges filed against him by the plaintiff in which he sets up matters of fact as defense in contradistinction to a demurrer which introduces objections on grounds of law. (2) In equity, a special defense setting forth one or more reasons for the dismissal or barring of the suit. An answer usually contains: (a) the title; (b) a reservation to the defendant of all the advantages which might be taken by exception to the bill; (c) the substance, in which the matters of the bill, together with the questions founded thereon, are replied to in rotation, and any additional matter that the defendant desires to bring forward to either qualify or strengthen the bill; (d) the general traverse or denial of all matters contained in the bill and which are not otherwise expressly answered. [< AS. andswaru, < andswerian; see ANSWER, v.] an'sweret-

Syn.: rejoinder, repartee, reply, response, retort. "An answer is made to a question; a reply is made to an assertion; a rejoinder is made to a reply; a response is made in accordance with the words of another." CRABB Eng. Synonyms. This statement is, however, too limited, as an answer is made to a charge as well as to a question; an answer may be even made to an unspoken implication or manifestation; see Luke v, 22. In fact, anything said or done in return for some word, action, or suggestion of another may be called an answer. The blow of an enraged man, the whinny of a horse, the howling of the wind, the movement of a bolt in a lock, an echo, etc., may each be an answer to some word or movement. A reply is an unfolding, and implies more thought and intelligence. A rejoinder is often used in the general sense of answer, but always with the implication of something more or less controversial or opposed, tho lacking the conclusiveness implied in answer; an answer, in the full sense, to a charge, an argument, or an objection is adequate, and finally refutes and disposes of it; a reply or rejoinder may be quite inadequate, so that one may say, "This reply is not an answer"; "I am ready with an answer" means far more than "I am ready with a reply." A response is accordant or harmonious, designed or adapted to carry on the thought of the words that called it forth, as the responses in a liturgical service, or to meet the wish of him who seeks it; as, the appeal for aid met a prompt and hearty response. Repartee is a prompt, witty, and commonly good-natured answer to some argument or attack; a retort may also be witty, but is severe and may be even savage in its intensity.— Prep.: an answer in writing, or by word of mouth, to the question.

an'swer-a-blᴱ, } Liable to be called to account (for anything or to some one); responsible; amenable; as, he is answerable to his own conscience.

It is . . . necessary that every officer remain individually answerable for his acts. F. LIEBER Civil Liberty p. 159. [c. 1877.]

2. That calls for or requires an answer, or that may be answered; also, obligated to answer.

Paley, in his Evidences, has used the word answerable in an active sense, as conveying the notion of being under obligation to make answer. EARLE Philol. Eng. Tongue p. 373. [CL. P. 1873.]

3. That corresponds, or is proportionate, adequate, or suitable; as, answerable to expectation.— an'swer-a-bl(e-nessᴱ, n.— an'swer-a-bly, adv.

Syn.: accountable, amenable, liable, responsible.— Ant.: clear, free, irresponsible.— Prep.: answerable to the owner for all damage; the criminal is answerable for his crime with his life.

ant, 1 ant; 2 ănt, n. 1. A heterogynous hymenopterous insect, esp. a formicid, usually social like the bee, the community containing males winged throughout life, females winged until after pairing, and wingless neuters, workers, or barren females; an emmet: a pismire.

The Little Red Ant (Monomorium pharaonis). 4/1

The males die after congress, and the work of the community is largely done by the neuters, which also care for the young. The nests, variously constructed, are divided into chambers and passageways and contain stores of food. Ants exhibit several remarkable characteristics: many species maintain Aphidæ as guests or as "milch cattle" for the sweet secretions they produce; others form associations with weaker species that stand to them in the relation of slaves. Ants are graminivorous or carnivorous, and very fond of honey. Many are named from their habits, as the carpenter-, foraging-, harvesting-, leaf-cutting, mason-, and soldier-ants.

an-te'ri-or, 1 an-tī'rı-ər or -or; 2 ăn-tē'ri-or, a. 1. Antecedent in time; prior; earlier; as, ages anterior to the flood.

When the Hellenic branch entered Europe . . . was so long anterior to Greek history that all knowledge of the time was lost.
J. F. CLARKE Ten Great Religions p. 262. [O. & CO. 1878.]

2. Farther front or forward, in space; as, an anterior cavity. Specif.: (1) Anat. & Zool. Situated in front; in the lower animals, relatively nearer the head. (2) Bot. Turned away from the main axis or stem, as the side of a leaf or flower; lower. [L., < ante, before.]

Syn.: former, forward, front, prior. Anterior, while it can be used of time, is coming to be employed chiefly with reference to place; as, the anterior lobes of the brain. Prior bears exclusive reference to time, and commonly where that which is first in time is first also in right; as, a prior demand. Former is used of time, or of position in written or printed matter, not of space in general. We can say former times, a former chapter, etc., but not the former part of a garden; we should say the front part of the garden, the forward car of a train. Former has a close relation, or sharp contrast, with something following; the former always implies the latter, even when not fully expressed, as in Acts i. 1, and Eccles. vii, 10. See ANTECEDENT.— Ant.: after, hind, hinder, hindmost, later, latter, posterior, subsequent, succeeding.— Prep.: to.— an-te"ri-or-i'-ty, n.— an-te'ri-or-ly, adv.— an-te'ri-or-ness, n.

an'them, n. 1. A musical composition, usually set to words from the Bible, especially from the Psalms, and sung in public worship; also, the accompanying words.

Four principal kinds are distinguished: full anthems, sung mainly by a chorus, assisted by a quartet; solo anthems, for a single voice; verse anthems, with solos, duets, etc., and subordinate chorus; and double anthems, for two choirs singing antiphonally.

The idea of responsive singing, choir answering to choir, or choir to priest, seems inherent in the term, and was an element conveyed by it, but this, as a necessary element of its meaning, has disappeared. GROVE Dict. Mus. vol. i, p. 70.

The pealing anthem swells the note of praise. GRAY Elegy st. 10.

2. Any song or hymn of gladness, praise, or triumph, or expressive of solemnity, consecration, reverence, etc.; as, a national anthem; the anthem of the lark.

An"thes-te'ri-a, 1 an"ŧhes-tī'rı-ə; 2 ăn"thĕs-tē'ri-a, n. pl. [Gr.] Class. Antiq. A three days' festival in honor of Dionysos held annually at Athens from the 11th to the 13th of the month Anthesterion. The first day was known as Pithœgia, or the "Jar-opening," when the new wine, matured from the previous vintage, was tasted with rejoicings, libations were poured to the gods, and the cups, houses, etc., decorated with spring flowers. The second day was the Choes, or "Pitcher-feast," when there was much merry-making and people went about dressed as followers of Bacchus. On this day the wife of the chief archon formally passed through the ceremony of marriage with the wine-god. On the third day came the Chytrol, "Feast of pots," which was observed as a season of mourning with solemn ceremonies in honor of departed souls. This feature of the festival has led some modern writers to regard the Anthesteria as primarily a feast of the dead; it seems, however, probable that it was a vintage rejoicing and celebration of the return of spring, held in honor of Dionysos.— An"thes-te'ri-ac, a.

An"thes-te'ri-on, 1 an"ŧhes-tī'rı-ən; 2 ăn"thĕs-tē'ri-ŏn, n. Gr. Antiq. A Greek month. See CALENDAR. [< Gr. Anthesterion, time of flowers, < anthos, flower.]

An-thic'i-dæ, 1 an-thĭs'ı-dī; 2 ăn-thĭç'i-dē, n. pl. Entom. A family of small heteromerous beetles with the foremost coxal cavities open backward, the hind coxæ not prominent, and the head abruptly narrowed backward: often found on flowers. An'thi-cus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. anthikos, flower-like, < anthos, flower.]— an'thi-cid, a. & n.— an'thi-coid, a.

ant'-hill", etc. See under ANT.

An-thi'næ, 1 an-ŧhaı'nī; 2 ăn-thĭ'nē, n. pl. Ornith. A subfamily of motacilloid birds with a long straight hind claw, including the titlarks or pipits. [< ANTHUS.]

an'thine, 1 an'ŧhin; 2 ăn'thin, a. Of or pertaining to the Anthinæ.

an'tho-, 1 an'thō-; 2 ăn'thō-. From Greek anthos, flower: a combining form.— An-tho'bi-a, n. pl. Entom. A section of scarabæoid beetles with the labium extended beyond the mentum, comprising species living mostly on flowers.— an-tho'bi-an, a. & n.— An"tho-bran'chi-a, n. pl. Conch. The Pygobranchia.— an"tho-bran'chi-ate, a. & n.— an'tho-carp, n. Bot. A fruit in which parts that do not usually belong to the ovary are united with it, as in the checkerberry (Gaultheria procumbens), a simple fruit, the blackberry or strawberry, aggregate fruits, or the partridge-berry, the mulberry, the pineapple, and the fig, collective fruits. an"tho-car'pi-um‡.— an"tho-car'pic, a.— an"tho-car'pous, a.— an"tho-clin'i-um, n. [-CLIN'I-A, pl.] Bot. [Rare.] A receptacle like that in the Compositæ.— An"tho-cor'i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A family of saldoidean bugs with the beak not reposing in a groove, and elytra compositæ. An-thoc'o-ris, n. (t. g.)— an-thoc'o-rid, a. & n.— an-thoc'o-roid, a.— an"tho-cy'a-nin, n. The blue coloring-matter of flowers; cyanin. an"tho-cy'an‡; an"tho-cy'ane‡; an"tho-cy'a-nine‡; an"tho-ky'an‡.— an-tho'di-um, n. [-DI-A, pl.] Bot. The flowering head of plants of the aster family, the "compound flower" of the old botanists: so called from the resemblance of the involucre to a calyx and of the ray-florets, when present, to petals.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

an"tho-gen'e-sis, n. The production of both male and female forms in the alternation of generations of plant-lice. —an"tho-ge-net'ic, a.— an-thog'ra-phy, n. Bot. A description of flowers; the branch of botany that treats of flowers.

an'thoid, 1 an'ŧhoid; 2 ăn'thŏid, a. Like a flower. [< ANTHO- + -OID.]

an"tho-leu'cin, n. The white coloring-matter of flowers. an"tho-leu'cine‡.— an'tho-lite, n. 1. Mineral. Same as ANTHOPHYLLITE. 2. A fossil flower, or an impression resembling a plant, especially an impression found in the coal-measures.

an-thol'o-gy, 1 an-ŧhel'o-jı; 2 ăn-thŏl'o-ġy, n. [-GIES, 1 -jız; 2 -ġis, pl.] 1. A collection of choice extracts from the writings of various authors, sometimes from the writings of a single author; originally, such a collection from Greek poetical writings.

A complete moral anthology from . . . Sophocles, Menander, and others. MOTLEY John of Barneveld vol. ii, p. 406. [H.]

2. Gr. Ch. (1) A manual of devotions for the laity in public worship. (2) A collection of sayings of holy persons.

The Liturgy is an anthology of the piety of ages and nations. EMERSON Rep. Men, Shakespeare p. 161. [H. M. & CO. 1890.]

3. [Rare.] A collection of flowers. 4‡. A treatise on flowers. [< Gr. anthologia, flower-gathering, < anthos, flower, + legō, gather.]— an"tho-log'i-cal, a. Pertaining to or consisting of an anthology.— an-thol'o-gist, n. The compiler of an anthology.

an-thol'y-sis, 1 an-ŧhel'ı-sis; 2 ăn-thŏl'y-sis, n. Bot. The retrograde metamorphosis of a flower in which parts normally combined are separated.

An"tho-ly'za, 1 an"tho-laı'zə; 2 ăn"tho-lȳ'za, n. Bot. 1. A small genus of showy South-African plants of the iris family (Iridaceæ), nearly allied to and resembling Gladiolus, with spikes of many bright-red, yellow, or crimson flowers overtopping the narrow, erect, sword-shaped leaves. A. cunonia, with scarlet and black flowers in secund racemes, is much admired. 2. [a-] Any plant of this genus. [< ANTHO- + Gr. lyssa, madness.]

an"tho-ma'ni-a, n. Pathol. A mania for flowers.— an"tho-ma'ni-ac, n.— An"tho-me-du'sæ, n. pl. Zool. A division of gymnoblastic hydroids without hydrothecæ or gonangia, and with panoblasts developed.— an"tho-me-du'san, a. & n.— An"tho-my'i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A family of flies with the terminal joints of the antennæ linear, and usually with plumose setæ. An"tho-my'a or -la, n. (t. g.) An"tho-my-i'i-dæ‡; An'tho-my'zi-dæ‡.— an"tho-my'id, a. & n.— an"tho-my'oid, a.

An'thon, 1 an'ŧhan; 2 ăn'thon, Charles (11/12 1797–7/22 1867). An American classical scholar.

An'tho-ny¹, 1 an'to-nı; 2 ăn'to-ny, n. 1. A masculine personal name. Tan'to-ny‡. An-to'ni-a (fem.); To'ny (dim.). Dan. D. G. Sw. An'ton, 1 ūn'ton, 2 ăn'tŏn; F. An"toine', 1 ăñ'twŏn'; 2 ăn"twăn'; It. Pg. Sp. An-to'ni-o, 1 an-tō'nı-ō, 2 ăn-tō'ni-ō. 2. Saint (251–356?), one of the Christian Fathers; founder of monastic life; born in Egypt. 3. Henry B. (4/5 1815–9/22 1884), an American statesman; Governor of Rhode Island. 4. Susan Brownell (2/15 1820–3/15 1906), an American reformer; woman suffragist. 5. A city, county-seat of Harper county, Kan. 6. A village in Kent county, R. I. [L., inestimable, or worthy of praise.]

An'tho-ny², 1 an'to-nı; 2 ăn'to-ny, n. The smallest pig of a litter: because one of a litter, often the smallest, was vowed to St. Anthony, the patron saint of swineherds. See TANTONY. Anthony pig‡.

An'tho-ny Ab'so-lute, Sir. In Sheridan's Rivals, father of Capt. Absolute, an irascible and absolute old gentleman.

An'tho-ny Chuz'zle-wit. In Dickens's Martin Chuzzlewit, Jonas's father, a mean and avaricious warehouseman.

An'tho-ny Humm. In Dickens's Pickwick Papers, chairman of an Ebenezer Temperance Association.

An"tho-ny's Cross, Saint. The tau cross, T or Y.

An'tho-ny's Nose. 1. A mountain east of the Hudson river, Putnam county, N. Y. 2. A mountain north of the Mohawk river, Montgomery county, N. Y.

ant'hood", n. See under ANT.

an-thoph'a-gous, a. Flower-eating.— An-thoph'i-la, n. pl. Entom. A tribe or series of hymenopterous insects with basal joints of hind tarsi dilate and densely pubescent, as bees.— an-thoph'i-lous, a. an"tho-phil'i-an‡.— an"tho-pho'bi-a, n. Unnatural aversion to flowers which sometimes grows into fear.— an'tho-phore, n. Bot. A stipe formed by the prolongation of an internode between the calyx and the corolla. an-thoph'o-rum‡.— An"-tho-phor'i-dæ, n. pl. A family of bees of the superfamily Apoidea. They are usually covered with a thick growth of hair, and form burrows under the earth, where the supplies of pollen and honey for the sustenance of their young are stored.— an-thoph'o-rous, a. Bot. Flower-bearing.— an'tho-phyll, n. Bot. A floral leaf, such as a petal or sepal.— an"tho-phyl'lite, n. Mineral. A brownish-gray amphibole ($MgFe.SiO_3$), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system.— an"tho-phyl-lit'ic, a.— An-thoph'y-ta, n. pl. Bot. Same as PHANEROGAMIA.— an'tho-phyte, n. A phanerogam.

An"thop-till'i-dæ, 1 an"thop-til'ı-dē; 2 ăn"thŏp-til'ı-dē. n. pl. Zooph. A family of spicate anthozoans having the rachis without pinnules and with sessile polyps. An-thop'ti-la, n. (t. g.) [< ANTHO- + Gr. ptilon, wing.]— an-thop'ti-lid, a. & n.

an'tho-rism, 1 an'thō-rizm; 2 ăn'thō-rĭsm, n. Rhet. A definition made to rebut one given by an opponent. [< Gr. anthorismos, < anti, against, + horizō, limit.]

an"tho-sid'er-ite, n. Mineral. A yellow or yellowish-brown silky silicious ferric oxid found in Brazil in the form of fibrous or feathery tufts.— An"tho-so'mi-dæ, n. pl. Crust. A family of siphonostomous copepods. An"tho-so'ma, n. (t. g.)— an"tho-so'mid, n.— an"tho-so'moid, a.— an'-tho-sperm, n. See TETRASPORE.

An"tho-sper'mum, 1 an"thō-spûr'mum; 2 ăn"thō-spĕr'mŭm, n. Bot. A small genus of South-African shrubs or trees of the madder family (Rubiaceæ). The best-known species is the greenhouse evergreen shrub A. æthiopica, the amber-tree, 2 to 3 feet high, with linear-lanceolate leaves whorled in 3's and whorled spikes of dicecious flowers. [< ANTHO- + Gr. sperma, seed.]

an'tho-tax"y, n. Bot. The arrangement of flowers on the axis of inflorescence. an"tho-tax'ist.

An"tho-thi'jah, 1 an"thō-thī'jə; 2 ăn"thō-thī'ja, n. Bib. (R. V.). 1 Chron. viii, 24.

an'tho-type, 1 an'thō-tīp; 2 ăn'thō-tȳp, n. Phot. A non-permanent picture printed on paper washed in the juice expressed from certain plants, as the violet or the rose: originated by Sir John Herschel. Compare AMYLOTYPE. [< ANTHO- + -TYPE.]

-an'thous, suffix. From Greek anthos, flower: an adjective ending used in botany: as, polyanthous, many-flowered.

an"tho-xan'thin, 1 an"thō-zan'thın; 2 ăn"thō-zăn'thĭn, n. The yellow coloring-matter found in flowers and certain fruits. an"tho-xan'thine‡.

An"tho-xan'thum, 1 an"thō-zan'thum; 2 an"thō-zăn'thŭm, n. Bot. A small genus of sweet-scented European grasses with spicate panicles of 1-flowered spikelets, peculiar among grasses in having 2 instead of 3 stamens in a flower. A. odoratum, the sweet vernal grass, is naturalized nearly throughout North America. [< ANTHO- + Gr. xanthos, yellow.]

an"tho-za'si-a, 1 an"thō-zē'sı-ə; 2 ăn"thō-zā'sĭ-a, n. Bot. A change of leaves into the appearance of petals.

An"tho-zo'a, 1 an"thō-zō'ə; 2 ăn"thō-zō'a, n. pl. Zooph. A class of cœlenterates, variously limited, including the sea-anemones and corals; the polyps. [< ANTHO- + Gr. zōon, life.]— an"tho-zo'an, a. & n.— an"tho-zo'ic, a.— an"tho-zo'on, n.

an"tho-zo'oid, 1 an"thō-zō'oid; 2 ăn"thō-zō'ŏid, n. An individual polyp in a compound colony. [< ANTHOZOA + -OID.]

an"tho-zu'si-a, 1 an"thō-zū'zı-ə; 2 ăn"thō-zy'sĭ-a, n. Bot. A change of stamens, sepals, or bracts into petals.

an'thra-, an'thrac-, an'thra-co-, } 1 an'thrə-, an'thrak-, an'thra-kō-; 2 ăn'-thra-, ăn'thrăc-, ăn'thra-cō-. From Greek anthrax, coal; also, a precious stone, and a form of ulcer: combining forms used commonly to denote substances resembling or derived from coal, or fossils found in the coal measures.— An"thra-car'i-dæ, n. pl. Crust. A Carboniferous family of macrurans with the first pair of legs like the others, first antennæ with two flagella, and second antennæ without scales.— an"thra-car'id, n.— an"thra-car'oid, a.— an"thra-ce'mi-a, n. Pathol. 1. Carbon monoxid in the blood. 2. The microbe of anthrax in the blood.— an'thra-cene, n. 1. Chem. A blue fluorescent crystalline compound ($C_{14}H_{10}$), obtained in the last products of coal-tar distillation and used largely in the manufacture of alizarin. 2. A ptomain obtained from cultures of the anthrax bacillus, which is poisonous in effect. an'thra-cint.— an"thra-ce-nif'er-ous, a. Bearing or containing anthracene.

Other words beginning with these prefixes will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

an-thra'ci-a, 1 an-thrē'shı-ə; 2 ăn-thrā'shi-a, n. Pathol. Any disease in which there is a formation of carbuncles. [< Gr. anthrax, ulcer.]

an-thrac'ic, 1 an-thras'ık; 2 ăn-thrăç'ic, a. Pathol. Of, pertaining to, or affected with anthrax.

an-thrac'i-form, 1 an-thras'ı-fōrm; 2 ăn-thrăç'ı-fôrm, a. Anthracoid. [< ANTHRAC- + -FORM.]

an'thra-cite, 1 an'thrə-sait; 2 ăn'thra-çīt, n. Mineral coal with a bright, submetallic, iron-black luster, conchoidal fracture, and a very small amount of volatile matter; in popular usage, hard coal. It consists of nearly pure carbon, and burns almost without flame. See COAL.

Anthracite is usually regarded as a metamorphic form of coal, and . . . it is formed from bituminous coal by contact metamorphism. WILLIAM B. SCOTT An Introduction to Geology p. 418. [ʟ. '09.]

[< Gr. anthrakitēs, coal-like, < anthrax, coal.]— an'thra-cit'er-ous, a. Containing anthracite. an"thra-ci-tif'er-ous‡.— an'thra-cite, tt. To change into anthracite. — an'thra-cite, a. Coal-black; of or pertaining to anthracite.— an'thra-cit'ic, a. Having the properties or characteristics of anthracite.— an'thra-cit-ism, n. The state or quality of being anthracitic.— an"thra-cit'i-za'-tion, n. The natural process by which other coals are converted into anthracite.— an'thra-ci"tous, a. Like or containing anthracite.

an-thrac'nose, 1 an-thrak'nōs; 2 ăn-thrăc'nōs. A destructive disease of plants usually manifested by sharply defined discolored spots and caused by Fungi-Imperfecti belonging to the genera Colletotrichum, Gloæsporium, Marsonia, etc. an"thrac-no'sis‡.

FORMS OF ANTHRACNOSE.

NAME.	Description, etc.
Alfalfa-a.....	Colletotrichum trifolii
Apple-a.....	A very destructive disease of the fruit, twigs, and branches of the apple, caused by Gloæsporium fructigenum (conidial stage of Glomerella rufomaculans)
Avocado-a.....	A disease of the leaf, Colletotrichum gloæsporioides
Bean-a.....	Gloæsporium venetum
Blackberry-a...	A disease of the cane and leaf, Gloæsporium venetum
Blue-grass a....	Colletotrichum cereale
Butternut-a....	Gloæsporium juglandis
Cantaloup-a....	Colletotrichum lagenarium
Chestnut-a.....	(1) Marsonia ochroleuca. (2) A bark disease, very destructive, caused by the ascomycetous fungus Diaporthe parasitica. Same as CHESTNUT-BLIGHT.
Citrus-fruit a...	Colletotrichum gloæsporioides, wither-tip disease
Clover-a.....	Colletotrichum trifolii
Cotton-a.....	Colletotrichum gossypii
Cranberry-a....	Glomerella rufomaculans
Cucumber-a....	Colletotrichum lagenarium
Currant-a.....	Gloæsporium ribes (a conidial stage of Pseudopeziza ribes)
Eggplant-a.....	A fungus, Gloæsporium melongenea
Ginseng-stem a.	Vermicularia dematium
Gooseberry-a...	Gloæsporium ribes (a conidial stage of Pseudopeziza ribes)
Grape-a.....	Gloæsporium ampelophagum
Hollyhock-a....	Colletotrichum malvarum
Lettuce-a.....	Marsonia perforans
Loquat-a.....	Colletotrichum gloæsporioides
Mango-a.....	Colletotrichum gloæsporioides
Maple-a.....	Gloæsporium apocryptum
Muskmelon-a...	Same as CUCUMBER-A. Fruit-anthracnose, Colletotrichum oligochætum
Oat-a.....	Colletotrichum cereale
Orange-a.....	A disease of the twigs and leaves, Colletotrichum gloæsporioides, orange wither-tip
Orchard-grass a.	Colletotrichum cereale
Peach-a.....	Gloæsporium læticolor
Pear-a.....	Colletotrichum sp.
Peppers-a.....	Colletotrichum nigrum
Privet-a.....	Gloæsporium cingulans
Raspberry-a....	Gloæsporium venetum
Redtop-a.....	Colletotrichum cereale
Rose-a.....	Gloæsporium rosæ
Rye-a.....	Colletotrichum cereale
Snapdragon-a...	Colletotrichum antirrhini
Sorghum-a.....	Colletotrichum falcatum
Spinach-a.....	Colletotrichum spinaceæ
Squash-a.....	Same as CUCUMBER-ANTHRACNOSE
Sycamore-a....	Gloæsporium nervisequum (a conidial stage of Gnonomia veneta)
Timothy-a.....	Colletotrichum cereale
Tomato-a.....	Colletotrichum phomoides
Violet-a.....	Gloæsporium violæ
Watermelon-a..	Same as CUCUMBER-ANTHRACNOSE
Wheat-a.....	Colletotrichum cereale

an'thra-cold, a. 1. Pathol. Resembling anthrax. 2. Like the precious carbuncle, or like carbon.— an-thrac'o-lite, n. Mineral. Same as ANTHRACONITE.— an'thra-co-man"cy, n. Divination by observation of burning coals.— an"-thra-com'e-ter, n. Chem. An instrument for determining the amount of carbon dioxid in a mixture of gases.— an"thra-co-met'ric, a.— an"thra-co-ne-cro'sis, n. Pathol. Gangrenous change of a tissue to a black mass, as in dry gangrene.— an-thrac'o-nite, n. Geol. A black marble or limestone colored with carbonaceous matter. an-thrac'o-lite‡.— An"thra-co-sau'ri-dæ, n. pl. Herp. A Carboniferous family of microsaurian amphibians with fully ossified vertebræ, deeply infolded teeth, and a lyre-shaped interorbital system of mucous canals. An"thra-co-sau'rus, n. (t. g.)— an"thra-co-sau'rid, n.— an"thra-co-sau'roid, a. & n.— an"thra-co'sis, n. Pathol. 1. Carbuncular disease. 2. Chronic inflammation of the lungs, produced by inhaling particles of solid matter, as coal-dust; the blackling of coal-workers.— an"thra-cot'ic, a.— an'-thra-co-there, n. A typical anthracotheriid.— An"-thra-co-the-ri'i-dæ, n. pl. Mam. An extinct family of artiodactyls having complete dentition and broad low crowns to the upper molars with 3 columns on the anterior and 2 on the posterior lobe.— An"thra-co-the'ri-um, n. (t. g.) An"thra-co-the'ri-dæ‡.— an"thra-co-the'ri-id, n.— an"thra-co-the'ri-oid, a. & n.— An"thra-co-the"ri-oi'de-a, n. pl. Mam. An extinct superfamily of artiodactyls having the upper molars quadritubercular and with an intermediate fifth. An"thra-co-the-roi'de-a‡.— an"thra-co-the"ri-oi'de-an, a. & n.— an"thra-cox'ene, n. Mineral. An amorphous resin-like hydrocarbon found in the coal-measures of Bohemia. When treated with ether, a black insoluble powder called anthracoxenite remains, while the dissolved portion can be regained as a brown soluble powder called schlanite.— an"thra-cox'en-ite, n. See ANTHRACOXENE.

an"thra-gal'iol, 1 an"thrə-gal'ōl or -ol; 2 ăn'thra-găl'-ōl or -ŏl, n. Org. Chem. A compound ($C_{14}H_8(OH)_2O_2$) obtained as by the action of melting potash on the various derivatives of anthracene or by warming a mixture of gallic, benzoic, and sulfuric acids, and occurring in the form of orange-red needles: used as a mordant dye. [< anthra- in ANTHRACENE + gal- in GALLIC[2] + -OL.]

an'thra-gen'e-sis, 1 an'thrə-jen'ı-sis; 2 ăn'thra-ĝĕn'e-sis, n. The process by which coal is formed from vegetable matter. — an"thra-ge-net'ic, a.

an'thra-nil, 1 an'thrə-nil; 2 ăn'thra-nĭl, n. Org. Chem. A volatile oil (C_7H_5NO) made from anthranilic acid. [< anthra- in ANTHRACENE + anil- in ANILIC.]

an'thra-nil'ic, 1 an"thrə-nil'ik; 2 ăn'thra-nĭl'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from coal-tar and anil or indigo; as, anthranilic acid, a white powder ($C_6H_4(NH_2)COOH$) obtained from indigo by treating with caustic potash, or by the action of hypochlorites on phthalimid; methylester, a constituent of jasmin-oil and used in perfumery.

an'thra-nol, 1 an'thrə-nōl or -nol; 2 ăn'thra-nōl or -nŏl, n. Org. Chem. A compound derived from anthracene by substituting an OH radical for one atom of hydrogen, as $C_6H_4{<}\begin{matrix}C(OH)\\CH\end{matrix}{>}C_6H_4$. [< ANTHRACENE + -OL.]

an"thra-pur'pu-rate, n. Chem. A salt of anthrapurpurin. — an"thra-pur'pu-rin, an"thra-pur'pu-rine, n. Chem. An orange-colored crystalline compound ($C_{14}H_6O_5$) formed during the conversion of anthracene into alizarin. Its salts furnish a dye brighter than alizarin.— an"thra-qui-none', n. Chem. A yellow crystalline compound ($C_{14}H_8O_2$) formed by the oxidation of anthracene, and valuable as the source of artificial alizarin.— an"thra-ro'bin, n. Chem. A yellowish-white compound ($C_{14}H_{10}O_3$) obtained by reducing alizarin: used as a medicine.— an"thra-ru'fin, n. Org. Chem. A crystalline compound ($HOC_6H_3(CO)_2C_6H_3OH$), isomeric with alizarin, obtained by melting β-anthraquinone disulfonic acid with caustic potash.— an'thra-sol, n. An unctuous substance prepared from juniper-tar, soothing and antipruritic in effect.

an'thrax, 1 an'thraks; 2 ăn'thrăks, n. [AN'THRA-CES, 1-sīz; 2-çēs, pl.] 1. Pathol. (1) A carbuncle. (2) A contagious and malignant febrile disease of cattle and sheep, sometimes affecting man, characterized by the presence of the Bacillus anthracis and often by carbuncular swellings (malignant pustule); charbon; splenic fever.

Animals dead of anthrax . . . should be burned if possible; if not, they should be buried deeply and covered with quicklime before the dirt is replaced.

Cyclo. of Am. Agriculture vol. iii, p. 130. [MACM. '08.]

2. A bacterium (Bacillus anthracis) found in the blood of cattle, sheep, and men affected with splenic fever. 3. A gem-stone of the ancients: probably identical with the carbuncle. [L., < Gr. anthrax, coal, ulcer.]

an-thrax'o-lite, 1 an-thraks'o-lait; 2 ăn-thrăks'o-lit, n. Mineral. A coaly, lustrous black mineral, one of the hydrocarbons, found in veins in metamorphic slates. [< Gr. anthrax, coal, + lithos, stone.]

an-thre'nus, 1 an-thrī'nus; 2 ăn-thrē'nŭs, n. [-NI, 1 -nai; 2 -nī, pl.] A dermestid beetle (genus Anthrenus), as the carpet-beetle (A. scrofulariæ), or A. varius and A. musæorum, which are museum pests. [< Gr. anthrēnē, hornet.]

An-thrib'i-dæ, 1 an-thrib'ı-dī; 2 ăn-thrib'ĭ-dē, n. pl. Entom. A family of weevils with a normal undivided pygidium and straight 10- or 11-jointed antennæ. An'thri-bus, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. anthos, flower.]— an'thri-bid, a. & n.— an'thri-boid, a.

An-thris'cus, 1 an-thris'kus; 2 ăn-thris'cŭs, n. Bot. A small genus of Old World herbs of the parsley family (Apiaceæ) with thin decompound leaves, compound umbels of inconspicuous white flowers, and linear, laterally compressed, ribless fruit without oil-tubes. A. cerefolium, the garden chervil, is naturalized in eastern and southern Pennsylvania. See CHERVIL. [L., < Gr. anthriskos, the chervil.]

an″thro-pol′o-gist, 1 an″thro-pel′o-jist; 2 ăn″thro-pŏl′o-ġist, n. A student of or specialist in the science of anthropology.

The anthropologists succeeded in proving that the skulls of the present inhabitants of Central France are of the same peculiar type as the skulls of the cave-men and dolmen builders.
ISAAC TAYLOR Origin of the Aryans ch. 1, p. 19. [S. & W., 1890.]

an″thro-pol′o-gy, 1 an″thro-pel′o-jɪ; 2 ăn″thro-pŏl′o-ġy, n. 1. The science of man in general; the sciences of man. See MAN.

Anthropology has long been used as the name for the science of man in general. According to Mason (1908), it treats all mankind as natural objects and as inventors, giving rise to two great divisions with subdivisions:

I. What man is: the natural history of man.	Physical Anthropology.
(1) The embryo and life of the individual.	Ontogeny.
(2) The body (specific and comparative).	Anatomy.
(3) Functions of the body.	Physiology.
(4) Form and color, weight and number.	Anthropometry.
(5) The nervous system in its relations to thought and feeling	Psychology.
(6) Natural divisions of mankind.	Ethnology.
II. What man does artificially: culture-history of man.	Cultural Anthropology.
(1) To express his thoughts.	Glossology.
(2) To supply wants.	Technology.
(3) To give pleasure.	Esthetology.
(4) To cooperate in life's ends.	Sociology.
(5) To account for the phenomena in lore, knowledge, science, and philosophy	Sophiology.
(6) In presence of the spirit world.	Hierology.
The past of culture history is studied:
(1) In ancient artifacts.	Archeology.
(2) In decipherment of inscriptions.	Paleography.
(3) In acts and sayings of the unlettered.	Folk-lore.
(4) In written records.	History.
Anthropology makes use of the sciences:
(1) To determine materials.	Mineralogy.
(2) To fix the age of relics.	Geology.
(3) In studying man and environment.	Geography.
(4) To identify plants and animals in relation to culture.	Zoology.

2. The science or sciences treating of man and his activities as a rational animal; anthropology proper. 3. Theol. That branch of theological science which treats of man, both in his original and in his fallen condition. It embraces the consideration of man's creation, primitive condition, probation and apostasy, original sin, and actual transgressions. See THEOLOGICAL SCIENCE. 4. A treatise on anthropology, in any of the foregoing senses. [< Gr. anthrōpologos, telling of man, < anthrōpos, man; and see -OLOGY.]

an″thro-pom′e-ter, 1 an″thro-pem′ɪ-tər; 2 ăn″thro-pŏm′e-tĕr, n. 1. A specialist in anthropometry. an″thro-po-me-tri′cian‡. 2. Any means of gaging a man, physically or mentally.

What other feature [than the nose] forms so perfect an anthropometer or index of the man whom it prefaces?
MATHEWS Great Conversers, Noses p. 260. [S. C. C. 1874.]

an″thro-pom′e-try, 1 an″thro-pem′ɪ-trɪ; 2 ăn″thro-pŏm′e-trɪ, n. The measurement of the human body: a minor branch of anthropography that deals with the differences in the physical dimensions and proportions that characterize sex, race, occupation, etc. Compare SOMATOLOGY. an″thro-po-met′rics‡.—an″thro-pom′e-trist, n.

An″thro-po-mor′pha, 1 an″thro-po-mēr′fə; 2 ăn″thro-po-môr′fa, n. pl. Mam. The Simiidæ.—an″thro-po-morph, n.

an″thro-po-mor′phic, 1 an″thro-po-mēr′fik; 2 ăn″thro-po-môr′fic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to anthropomorphism.

To every form of theism . . . an anthropomorphic element is indispensable. FISKE Idea of God p. 135. [S. S. & CO. 1887.]

2. Having human form or human characteristics; man-shaped; anthropomorphous. an″thro-po-mor′phi-cal‡.—an″thro-po-mor′phi-cal-ly, adv.

an″thro-po-mor′phism, 1 -mēr′fizm; 2 -môr′fɪsm, n. 1. Theol. The ascription of human attributes, feelings, and conduct to spiritual beings, especially God or any deity.

Anthropomorphism is the natural result of the limitations of human thought and language: hence the language of science and philosophy must, in the broader meaning of the word, always be anthropomorphic.

It was necessary . . . for the sacred writers to speak of God as if he had a human body; and this is what is called anthropomorphism. FARRAR in Sunday School Times Oct. 11, 1890, p. 643.

2. The ascription of human characteristics to the powers of nature or a natural object, animate or inanimate, as to a flower or a force.

an″thro-po-mor′phist, 1 -mēr′fist; 2 -môr′fɪst, n. One who believes in, advocates, or uses anthropomorphism.

an″thro-po-mor′phite, 1 -mēr′fait; 2 -môr′fīt, a. Of or pertaining to anthropomorphism. [< L. anthropomorphitæ, < Gr. anthrōpomorphos; see ANTHROPOMORPHOUS.] an″thro-po-mor-phit′ic‡; an″thro-po-mor-phit′i-cal‡.

an″thro-po-mor′phite, n. 1. An anthropomorphist. 2. [A-] Ch. Hist. Same as AUDIAN.

an″thro-po-mor′phi-tism, 1 -mēr′fi-tizm; 2 -môr′fi-tɪsm, n. Anthropomorphite belief; anthropomorphism.

an″thro-po-mor′phize, 1 -mēr′faiz; 2 -môr′fīz, v. [-PHIZED; -PHIZ′ING.] I. t. To invest with human attributes; represent as having human form, passions, etc.

The world is thoroughly anthropomorphized, as if it had passed through the body and mind of man, and taken his mould and form. EMERSON Letters and Social Aims, Poetry p. 27. [H. M. & CO. 1889.]

II. i. To indulge in anthropomorphism.—an″thro-po-mor″phi-za′tion, n.

an″thro-po-mor-phol′o-gy, 1 -mēr-fel′o-ji; 2 -môr-fŏl′o-ġy, n. The use of anthropomorphic language; the speaking of God in terms applicable to men. [< ANTHROPOMORPHIC + -OLOGY.] —an″thro-po-mor″pho-log′i-cal, a.— -ly, adv.

an″thro-po-mor′pho-sis, 1 -mēr′fo-sis; 2 -môr′fo-sɪs, n. Change to human shape.

an″thro-po-mor″pho-the′ist, 1 -mēr′fo-thī′ɪst; 2 -môr′fo-thē′ist, n. A believer in the human attributes of Deity; also, an anthropomorphist. [< ANTHROPOMORPHOUS + Gr. theos, god.]

an″thro-po-mor′phous, 1 -mēr′fus; 2 -môr′fŭs, a. Having or resembling human form; man-shaped; anthropomorphic. [< Gr. anthrōpomorphos, < anthrōpos, man, + morphē, form.] —-ly, adv.

an″thro-pon′o-my, 1 an″thro-pen′o-mɪ; 2 ăn″thro-pŏn′o-my, n. The science of the laws that regulate the development of man in relation to environment and to other organisms; the highest or predictive stage of anthropology. [< ANTHROPO- + -NOMY.] an″thro-po-nom′ics‡.—an″thro-po-nom′i-cal, a.

an″thro-pop′a-thy, 1 -pep′a-thɪ; 2 -pŏp′a-thy, n. The attributing of human emotions, passions, suffering, etc., to God or to gods. [< ANTHROPO- + -PATHY.]

The imperfection of the language which is technically called anthropopathy: namely, the attribution to God of human passions.
FARRAR Sunday School Times, Oct. 11, 1890, p. 643.

—an″thro-po-path′ic, a. Having human feeling or passion; of or pertaining to anthropopathy. an″thro-po-path′i-cal‡.—an″thro-po-path′i-cal-ly, adv.—an″thro-pop′a-thism, n. Anthropopathy; also, an expression used in anthropopathy.—an″thro-pop′a-thite, n. A believer in anthropopathy.

an″thro-poph′a-gi, 1 -pef′a-jai; 2 -pŏf′a-ġī, n. pl. Eaters of human flesh; cannibals. an-tic'i-pant, 1 an-tis'i-pənt; 2 ăn-tĭç'i-pant, a. Coming or acting in advance; anticipating; expectant: said specifically of periodic diseases where attacks come at shorter and shorter intervals.—an-tic'i-pant, n.

an-tic'i-pate, 1 an-tis'i-pēt; 2 ăn-tĭç'i-pāt, v. [-PAT'ED; -PAT'ING.] I. t. 1. To look forward to the coming or future existence or presence of, especially with confidence or pleasure; have a foretaste of; look for; foresee; expect.

At least one of the Hebrew (Jer. xxx, 21) prophets anticipated the coming among men of a representative republican form of government. L. T. TOWNSEND Bible in 19th Cent. p. 77. [CHAUT. 1890.]

2. To act sooner than; be quicker than in doing, taking, or using something, especially in opposition; prevent; forestall; as, to anticipate the enemy by prompt action.

Expedition and dispatch anticipate the designs of the enemy.
CERVANTES Don Quixote tr. by Jervas, pt. i, bk. iv, ch. 46, p. 322. [P. & CO.]

3. To foresee and accomplish beforehand, as a desire or command. 4. To do, take, or use beforehand; take up, consider, or experience before the usual or expected time; foretaste; accelerate; as, to anticipate a payment. 5. To occupy the position of at an earlier time; be in advance of.

In several respects, the Mosaic Law is declared to have anticipated modern science by several thousand years.
J. K. HOSMER Story of the Jews pt. ii, p. 149. [O. P. P. 1887.]

6†. To take possession of beforehand.

II. i. 1. To do or consider something before the usual or proper time. 2. To recur at shorter intervals or before the usual time; as, the paroxysms anticipate. [< L. anticipatus, pp. of anticipo, < ante, before, + capio, take.]

Syn.: apprehend, expect, forecast, foretaste, hope. To anticipate may be either to take before in fact or to take before in thought; in the former sense it is allied with prevent; in the latter, with the synonyms above given. This is coming to be the prevalent and favorite use. We expect that which we have good reason to believe will happen; as, a boy expects to grow to manhood. We hope for that which we much desire and somewhat expect. We apprehend what we both expect and fear. Anticipate is commonly used now, like foretaste, of that which we expect both with confidence and pleasure. In this use it is a stronger word than hope, where often "the wish is father to the thought." I hope for a visit from my friend, tho I have no word from him; I expect it when he writes that he is coming; and as the time draws near I anticipate it with pleasure. See ABIDE; PREVENT.—Ant.: despair of, distrust, doubt, dread, fear, recall, recollect, remember.—an-tic'i-pa-ta-bl(e)ᵖ, a. That may be anticipated.—an-tic'i-pate-ly†, adv. By anticipation.—an-tic'i-pa"tor, n.

an-tic"i-pa'tion, 1 an-tis'i-pē'shən; 2 ăn-tĭs'i-pā'shon, n. 1. The act of anticipating; confident expectation; action beforehand; a forestalling; as, pleasures of anticipation; anticipation of a payment. 2. A preconception by which an unknown object is conceived beforehand or is recognized; an instinctive prevision or foretaste.

The man who let the mere anticipation of discovery choke him was simply a man of weak nerves. ELIOT Romola p. 153. [H.]

3. Psychol. (1) A reaction due to the expectation of an impending stimulus, but before its actual application. (2) A hasty generalization; ill-grounded notion: so used by Bacon. 4. Law. (1) The advancement by a trustee of unaccrued income. (2) The alienation by a married woman of unaccrued income from her separate estate. (3) An objection to a patent, based on prior knowledge or invention. 5. Mus. The introduction of a note before its expected place in the harmony. 6. Rhet. Prolepsis.

Syn.: antepast, apprehension, expectation, foreboding, foresight, foretaste, forethought, hope, presentiment, prevision. Expectation may be either of good or evil; presentiment almost always, apprehension and foreboding always, of evil; anticipation and antepast, commonly of good. Thus, we speak of the pleasures of anticipation. A foretaste may be of good or evil, and is more than imaginary; it is a part actually received in advance. Foresight and forethought prevent future evil and secure good by timely looking forward, and acting upon what is foreseen. Compare ANTICIPATE.—Ant.: astonishment, consummation, despair, doubt, dread, enjoyment, fear, realization, surprize, wonder. —anticipation of life (Insur.), same as EXPECTATION OF LIFE.—anticipations of experience, in Kantian philosophy, the a priori principles which determine the nature of all empirical knowledge; especially, the principle that every sensation must have some degree, or intensive magnitude.

an'ti-dote, n. 1. Anything that will counteract or remove the effects of poison, disease, or the like.

A man who has been poisoned only need neglect the antidote and he will die. DRUMMOND Nat. Law, Degeneration p. 109. [D. P. 1884.]

2. Anything that will correct or counteract evil of any kind, physical or mental, or its effects.

In nearly every case of poisoning the stomach and alimentary canal should be emptied as soon as possible.

Mechanical antidotes. (1) Siphoning. It should be used very cautiously or not at all when a corrosive poison has been taken. (2) Stomach-pump. (3) Emetics. A tablespoonful of common salt or powdered mustard in a cupful of lukewarm water, repeated if necessary, is safe and efficient. 10 to 30 grains of sulfate of zinc, 20 to 40 grains of ipecacuanha, apomorphin — 5 drops of a 2-per-cent solution administered hypodermically — are also effective. (4) Purgatives. (5) Demulcents. They include mild oils, white of egg, glycerin, flaxseed-tea, slippery-elm tea, and the like. Chemical a. include oils, soap, albumin (in white of egg, milk, etc.), iodin, hydrated oxid of iron, magnesia, starch, tannic acid, and many others. As a general chemical antidote when the nature of the poison is unknown, equal parts of hydrated oxid of iron, calcined magnesia, and charcoal may be given. Under the head of physiological a. may be classed exercise and external remedial measures that tend to overcome the effects of the poison, such as artificial respiration, application of heat, etc.

The more common poisons and their antidotes are given below, the antidotes in parentheses: absinthe (mucilaginous drinks and emetics); acetic acid (soap, alkalis, and oily drinks); alcohol (hot and cold douches, coffee); ammonium (vinegar, vegetable acids, olive-oil); antimony (white of egg, strong coffee); arsenic (hydrated oxid of iron with magnesia, washing-lye and chlorid of iron, castor-oil); bromin (magnesia, white of egg, starch-water); caffein (morphin, stimulants); camphor (purgatives, heat, hypodermic injections); carbolic acid (Epsom salts, alcohol, heat); castor-oil (flour, starch); chlorin (white of egg, magnesia); coal-gas (oxygen, coffee); cocain (alcoholic stimulants, amyl nitrite); copper and its salts (milk, white of egg, opium); cyanogen (inhaled ammonia and stimulants); deadly nightshade (tannic acid, strong coffee, an enema); dog-bite, see SALIVA; ether (ammonia, digitalis, oxygen); fish (purgatives, stimulants, artificial heat); fungi, including mushrooms, etc. (atropin, stimulants, heat); fusel oil (strong coffee); hemlock (tannic acid, atropin); holly-berries (emetics, coffee); hydrochloric acid (water, lime, magnesia); insects, poisonous (soap, ammonia); iodin (starch, morphin); iron, etc. (bicarbonates in water, ice, opium); lactic acid (oily drinks); laudanum, see OPIUM; lead (Epsom salts, milk, poultices); meat and ptomains (cathartics, stimulants); mercury (milk, white of egg, flour); morphin, see OPIUM; naphthalin (stimulants and soothing drinks); nicotin (tannic acid, strychnin, stimulants); niter (mucilaginous drinks, heat); opium (strong tea, sharp electric shocks, stimulants); petroleum (milk, stimulants, friction); phosphorus (hydrogen peroxid, lime-water, Epsom salts); poison-ivy (carron-oil, purgatives, moderate diet); prussic acid, see HYDROCYANIC ACID; salicylic acid (stimulants, coffee, heat); saliva (ligature above wound, cauterization, Pasteur treatment, hypodermic injection); silver and its salts (salt in milk, albumin); snake-bite (incision and cupping, cauterization, hypodermic); strychnin (tannic acid, chloral); sulfuric acid (alkalis, lime-water, soda); tobacco, see NICOTIN; turpentine (water, demulcents); zinc (milk, eggs, carbonate of potash). [F., < L. antidotum, < Gr. antidoton, < anti, against, + didōmi, give.] SYN.: corrective, cure, remedy, specific.— ANT.: bane, poison, venom, virus.— PREP.: to, for, or against.

an-tin'o-my, 1 an-tin'o-mı; 2 ăn-tĭn'o-my (XIII), n. [-MIES, 1-mız; 2 -mis, pl.] 1. Self-contradiction in a law or irreconcilability between statutes or principles; the opposition of one law or rule to another law or rule. 2. Philos. A contradiction between two conclusions, each of which seems equally necessary, but both of which can not be true. Kant held that such antinomies are extra-logical, but arise when the attempt is made to apply to the transcendental and absolute the categories which belong only within the sphere of the empirical. He distinguished four, between the conceptions (1) of a finite and an infinite world, (2) of the divisibility and indivisibility of matter, (3) of freedom and necessity, and (4) of the existence or non-existence of a necessary being. No such contradiction as is assumed exists between reason and understanding.

In Divine as well as human truths there are certain antinomies, irreconcilable by the mere understanding.

See ANTIC. [F., < L. antiquus, < ante, before.]

SYN.: ancient, antiquated, old-fashioned, quaint, superannuated. Antique refers to an ancient, antiquated to a discarded style. Antique is that which is either ancient in fact or ancient in style. The reference is to the style rather than to the age. We can speak of the antique architecture of a church just built. The difference between antiquated and antique is not in the age, for a Puritan style may be scorned as antiquated, while a Roman or Renaissance style may be prized as antique. The antiquated is not so much out of date as out of vogue. Old-fashioned may be used approvingly or contemptuously. In the latter case it becomes a synonym for antiquated; in the good sense it approaches the meaning of antique, but indicates less duration. We call a wide New England fireplace old-fashioned; a coin of the Cæsars, antique. Quaint combines the idea of age with a pleasing oddity; as, a quaint gambrel-roofed house. Antiquated when used of persons has nearly the sense of superannuated. The antiquated person is out of style and sympathy with the present generation by reason of age; the superannuated person is incapacitated for present activities by reason of age. See AGED; ANCIENT.—Ant.: fashionable, fresh, modern, modish, new, recent, stylish.— an"ti-sep'tic, n. Med. An agent or medicine used in antisepsis; anything that destroys or restrains the growth of putrefactive micro-organisms.

In medicine, antiseptics are divided into two groups: internal antiseptics, used for the destruction of germs within the body itself, and external antiseptics, used for the destruction of germs outside the body. The more important antiseptics are carbolic acid, metallic salts, and chlorinated lime; quinin kills the malarial parasite, and salicylic acid overcomes bacterial infections in cases of acute articular rheumatism, etc. In modern surgery the aim is to secure cleanliness of the wound, and for this purpose sterilization of all instruments and bandages is recommended in order to prevent the growth of bacteria and the necessity of antiseptics.

What an antiseptic is a pure life!

Syn.: anguish, apprehension, care, concern, disquiet, disturbance, dread, fear, foreboding, fretfulness, fretting, misgiving, perplexity, solicitude, trouble, worry. Anxiety is, according to its derivation, a choking disquiet, akin to anguish; anxiety is mental; anguish may be mental or physical; anguish is in regard to the known, anxiety in regard to the unknown; anguish is because of what has happened, anxiety because of what may happen. Anxiety refers to some future event, always suggesting hopeful possibility, and thus differing from apprehension, fear, dread, foreboding, terror, all of which may be quite despairing. In matters within our reach, anxiety always stirs the question whether something can not be done, and is thus a valuable spur to doing; in this respect it is allied to care. Foreboding, dread, etc., commonly incapacitate for all helpful thought or endeavor. Worry is a more petty, restless, and manifest anxiety; anxiety may be quiet and silent; worry is communicated to all around. Solicitude is a milder anxiety. Fretting or fretfulness is a weak complaining without thought of accomplishing or changing anything, but merely as a relief to one's own disquiet. Perplexity often involves anxiety, but may be quite free from it. A student may be perplexed regarding a translation, yet, if he has time enough, not at all anxious regarding it.— Ant.: apathy, assurance, calmness, carelessness, confidence, ease, light-heartedness, nonchalance, satisfaction, tranquillity.— Prep.: anxiety for a friend's return; anxiety about, in regard to, or concerning the future.— precordial anxiety (Pathol.), same as ANXIETY, 3.

anx'ious, 1 aŋk'shus; 2 ăŋk'shŭs, a. 1. Affected with anxiety; troubled, disquieted, or distressed in mind respecting some uncertain matter; subject to painful or disturbing suspense; as, anxious about a friend's safety.

The last thing we need be anxious about is property.
LOWELL Democracy and Other Addresses p. 9. [H. M. & CO. 1887.]

None are so anxious as those who watch and wait.
DICKENS Old Curiosity Shop vol. i, p. 105. [H. & H. 1871.]

2. Fraught with or caused by solicitude or anxiety; worrying; distressing; as, anxious forebodings. 3. Having the desire intently fixed; earnestly desirous; intent; eager; as, anxious to start on a journey; anxious to avoid mistakes.

The bravest men are . . . the most anxious to avoid quarrels.
MATHEWS Getting On in the World p. 154. [S. C. & G. 1874.]

Syn: calmness, composure, immobility, impassibility, indifference, insensibility, lethargy, phlegm, sluggishness, stoicism, unconcern, unfeelingness. Apathy, according to its Greek derivation, is a simple absence of feeling or emotion. There are persons to whom a certain degree of apathy is natural, an innate sluggishness of the emotional nature. In the apathy of despair, a person gives up, without resistance or sensibility, to what he has fiercely struggled to avoid. Composure is freedom from agitation or disturbance, resulting ordinarily from force of will, or from perfect confidence in one's own resources. Impassibility is a philosophical term applied to the Deity, as infinitely exalted above all stir of passion or emotion. Unfeelingness, the Saxon word that should be the exact equivalent of apathy, really means more, a lack of the feeling one ought to have, a censurable hardness of heart. Indifference and insensibility designate the absence of feeling toward certain persons or things; apathy, entire absence of feeling. Indifference is a want of interest; insensibility is a want of feeling; unconcern has reference to consequences. We speak of insensibility of heart, immobility of countenance. Stoicism is an intentional suppression of feeling and deadening of sensibilities, while apathy is involuntary. See CALMNESS; STUPIDITY; STUPOR.—Ant: anxiety, care, eagerness, emotion, feeling, sensibility, sensitiveness, susceptibility, sympathy.—Prep: apathy of disposition; apathy toward good.

Apiece with and conterminous to his soul.

E. B. BROWNING Aurora Leigh bk. vii, l. 799.

SYN.: distributively, each, individually, separately, severally. There is no discernible difference in sense between so much apiece and so much each; the former is the more common and popular, the latter the more elegant expression. Distributively is generally used of numbers and abstract relations. Individually emphasizes the independence of the individuals; separately and severally still more emphatically hold them apart. The signers of a note may become jointly and severally responsible, i. e., each liable for the entire amount, as if he had signed it alone. Witnesses are often brought separately into court, in order that no one may be influenced by the testimony of another. If a company of laborers demand a dollar apiece, that is a demand that each shall receive that sum; if they individually demand a dollar, each individual makes the demand. ANT.: accumulatively, collectively, confusedly, indiscriminately, synthetically, together.

a'pi-in, 1 ē'pi-in; 2 ā'pi-ĭn, n. Chem. A crystalline compound ($C_{27}H_{32}O_{14}H_2O$) extracted from parsley as a gelatinous substance by boiling water. [< APIUM.]

3. One of a class of late Jewish and early Christian writings, characterized especially by figurative and symbolic language, partaking in this respect of the same literary form as the canonical Apocalypse, and containing eschatological predictions in the form of a revelation. These writings appeared between 250 B. C. and A. D. 150, and were designed to revive the Messianic hopes of the Jews. Some of these writings are canonical, some are apocryphal, and others are neither.

The chief apocalyptic books are: (1) Old Testament— Psalms of Solomon, Book of Enoch, Testament of the Twelve Patriarchs, Assumption of Moses, Apocalypse of Baruch, Apocalypse of Abraham, 4th Book of Ezra, and Psalm cli.

Of the following only fragments are extant: Book of Noah, Book of Eldad and Modad, Book of the Secrets of Enoch, Apocalypse of Zephaniah, Apocalypse of Elijah.

(2) New Testament— The Shepherd of Hermas, Sibylline Oracles, Oracles of Hystaspes, 5th and 6th Books of Ezra, The Apocalypses of Paul, Thomas, and Stephen, The Apocalypses of Esdras, Paul, John, Peter, Shadrach, Daniel, and The Virgin. Compare APOCRYPHA.

4. One of these books. [< L. apocalypsis, < Gr. apokalypsis, revelation, < apo, from, + kalyptō, cover.] a-poc"a-lyp'tic‡.

SYN.: disclosure, manifestation, revelation. The Apocalypse unveils the future, as if to the very gaze of the seer; the whole gospel is a disclosure of the mercy of God; the character of Christ is a manifestation of the divine holiness and love; all Scripture is a revelation of the divine will. Or we might say that nature is a manifestation of the divine character and will, of which Scripture is the fuller and more express revelation.— ANT.: cloud, cloudiness, concealment, hiding, mystery, obscuration, shrouding, veiling.

a-poc'a-lypt, 1 ə-pok'ə-lipt; 2 a-pŏc'a-lĭpt, n. [Rare.] 1. An interpreter of the Apocalypse. 2. A revealer, real or pretended, of the unknown; specif. [A-], the author of the Book of Revelation. a-poc'a-lypst‡ [Rare]; a-poc"a-lyp'tic‡; a-poc"a-lyp'tist‡.

a-poc"a-lyp'tic, 1 ə-pek'ə-lip'tik; 2 a-pŏc'a-lĭp'tic, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or like the Apocalypse or any prophetic revelation.

Life calls to us In some transformed, apocalyptic voice.
E. B. BROWNING Aurora Leigh bk. i, l. 675.

2. Given to interpreting prophecy; presenting a revelation or discovery; as, an apocalyptic preacher. [< Gr. apokalyptikos, < apo, from, + kalyptō, cover.] a-poc"a-lyp'ti-cal‡.— apocalyptic literature, a class of later Jewish and early Christian writings treating largely of a future Messianic kingdom. See APOCRYPHA.— a. number, the number of the Beast, 666, mentioned in Rev. xiii, 18. Biblical commentators have given various explanations of the number by means of gematria, applying it to Nero, Napoleon, and other celebrated personages.— a-poc"a-lyp'ti-cal-ly, adv.— a-poc"a-lyp'ti-cism, n. 1. See MILLENARIANISM. 2. The practise or habit of expounding prophetic revelation.

ap"o-ca-tas'ta-sis, 1 ap'o-kə-tas'tə-sis; 2 ăp'o-ca-tăs'ta-sĭs, n. 1. Return to or toward a previous place or condition; reestablishment; complete restoration. 2. Theol. The final restoration to holiness and the favor of God of those who died impenitent. 3. Astron. The periodic return of a revolving body to the same point in its orbit. [< Gr. apokatastasis, < apo, from, + kata, down, + histēmi, stand.] ap"o-ka-tas'ta-sist.— ap"o-cat"a-stat'ic, a.

ap"o-cen'ter, 1 ap'o-sen'tər; 2 ăp'o-çĕn'ter, n. Biol. An organ deviating from a primitive or typical one.— ap"o-cen'tric, a.— ap"o-cen'tri-cal-ly, adv.

ap"o-cen-tric'i-ty, 1 ap'o-sen-tris'i-ti; 2 ăp'o-çĕn-trĭç'i-ty, n. The condition of being apocentric.— multiradial apocentricity (Ornith.), a deviation which may occur repeatedly. — pseudocentric a. (Ornith.), deviation which may mimic the archicentric condition.— unradial a. (Ornith.), deviation in a single modification.

ap'o-cha, 1 ap'o-kə; 2 ăp'o-ca, n. Rom. & Civ. Law. A receipt for money paid. Compare ANTAPOCHA. [< Gr. apochē.] — apocha trium annorum (Scots Law), the three consecutive acquittances of termly or annual dues, which, in the case of periodical payments, presumes the discharge of all preceding indebtedness.

ap"o-chro-mat'ic, 1 ap'o-kro-mat'ik; 2 ăp'o-cro-măt'ic, a. More exactly achromatic than an ordinary achromatic lens: said of a lens of improved form.— ap"o-chro'ma-tism, n.

ap"o-co-de'ine, 1 ap'o-ko-di'in; 2 ăp'o-co-dē'in, n. Chem. An amorphous yellowish compound ($C_{18}H_{19}NO_2$) derived from codein by treatment with zinc chlorid: used in medicine as an expectorant. [< APO- + CODEIN.] ap"o-co-de'ine‡.

a-poc'o-pate, 1 ə-pek'o-pēt; 2 a-pŏc'o-pāt, vt. [-PAT'ED; -PAT'ING.] To subject to apocope; especially, in grammar, (1) to cut off or drop (a final letter or syllable), or (2) to shorten (a word) by dropping the final letter or syllable.

You apocopate that from the alphabet, and Deacon Hadlock will apocopate you from the school.

SYLVESTER JUDD Margaret pt. ii, ch. 1, p. 168. [R. BROS. 1871.]

— a-poc'o-pate, a. Shortened or cut off by apocope or by apocopating. a-poc'o-pat"ed‡.— a-poc"o-pa'tion, n. Abbreviation by apocope.

a-poc'o-pe, 1 ə-pek'o-pi; 2 a-pŏc'o-pe, n. 1. Gram. A cutting off, dropping, or elision of the last letter or syllable of a word, as in chapel for the older chapelle, or th' for the. Compare APHERESIS; APHESIS; SYNCOPE. 2. Pathol. Removal of substance by a wound or by amputation. [L., < Gr. apokopē, < apo, off, + koptō, cut.] — a-poc'o-pic, a.

A-poc'ry-pha, } n. sing. & pl. 1. Eccl. (1) A collection
A-poc'ry-faᴾ, } of fourteen books, included in the Septuagint and Vulgate but not in the canonical Hebrew Scriptures, and while accepted as canonical by the Roman Catholic Church are generally rejected by the Protestant churches.

The books are: 1 and 2 Esdras, Tobit, Judith, Esther x, 4-xvi, Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch, Song of the Three Holy Children, History of Susanna, Bel and the Dragon, Prayer of Manasses, and 1 and 2 Maccabees. Compare ANTILEGOMENA. The primary meaning of the word is "hidden," "secret," but in the second century it seems to have been associated with "spurious" and ultimately to have settled down into that meaning. According to later conjecture (preface to Apocrypha, English Bible, 1539), the name was given to the books because read only in private.

(2) One of the various collections of apocryphal writings that abounded in the 1st and 2d centuries, in imitation of, or proposed as additions to, the New Testament Gospels. Of these the more important are: (a) Old Testament— Books of Adam, Book of Jubilees, 3d and 4th Books of Maccabees, Ascension of Isaiah, Paralipomenon Jeremiæ, Pseudo-Philo's Book.

(b) New Testament— Logia, or Sayings of Christ; the Gospels of the Hebrews, of Thomas, Peter, the Twelve, the Egyptian, Nicodemus, the Infancy; the Acts of Andrew, of John, Peter, Paul, Pilate, Preaching of Peter, Abgar Epistles, the Epistle of Barnabas, the Epistles to the Laodiceans, and of Ignatius, Polycarp, and Clement. Compare APOCALYPSE.

2. [a-] Any writing or statement of dubious authority. 3. [a-] Hidden things; secrets. [LL., neut. pl. of apocryphus, < Gr. apokryphos, hidden, < apo, away, + kryptō, conceal.]

A-poc'ry-phal, } [a-] Eccl. Of or pertaining to the Apocry-
A-poc'ry-falᴾ, } pha; not canonical.

GEIKIE Life of Christ p. 85. [A. D. ex. 1880.]

2. [a-] Of unknown authorship or doubtful authenticity.

In a higher than the literal sense, the most apocryphal incidents of this most splendid and imaginative of gossips are full of truth. CRAIK Eng. Lit. and Lang., vol. i, p. 189. [S. 1877.] [< LL. apocrypha; see APOCRYPHA.] ap"o-cryph'i-cal‡; a-poc'ry-phous‡.

A-pol'line, 1 ə-pol'ın; 2 a-pōl'in, a. Belonging to or connected with Apollo. Ap"ol-lin'ic‡.

A-pol'lo, 1 ə-pol'o; 2 a-pŏl'o, n. [L.] 1. Class. Myth. One of the twelve greater gods. He was the son of Zeus (Jupiter) and Leto (Latona), and was twin brother of Artemis. They were born on the island of Delos, whither their mother had fled to escape from the jealous anger of Hera. He is one of the most versatile of the Olympian gods. As the god of youth, manly beauty, music, and song, he represents the Greek mind at its best. He was the god of prophecy, with his oracle at Delphi; the protector of flocks and herds, the helper and averter of evil, and also the god of righteous punishment. He delighted also in the foundation of cities and the establishment of constitutions, so that no city or colony was ever founded without his oracle being consulted or sacrifices offered. To his oracles people turned in sickness, and thus he came to be the god of healing and father of Æsculapius. As patron of colonization he was invoked as Delphinius or the dolphin-god; as Euryalus, god of the broad seas and as the embarker and disembarker. As Agyieus he was god of the streets and ways. Finally, as Phœbus, he was god of the sun, altho in Homer, Apollo and Helios, the sun, are always distinct; none the less his identification as the sun-god is universal among later writers. His attributes were the lyre and the bow; as god of the Pythian oracle, the tripod, and the bay as god of the Pythian games. Among the Romans the worship of Apollo was the earliest introduced from the Greeks, and the ludi Apollinares were founded in 212 B. C. during the Second Punic war, while in the reign of Augustus, who considered himself as under the patronage of Apollo, he became one of the chief gods of Rome. In art Apollo is represented more frequently than any other ancient deity, and his most famous existing statue is the Apollo Belvedere. 2. Same as CASTOR. See STAR. 3. A statue of Apollo. 4. [a-] A butterfly (Parnassus apollo) found in the mountainous parts of Europe.—Apollo Belvedere, a celebrated antique statue of Apollo in the Belvedere of the Vatican Museum in Rome, regarded as one of the most perfect representations of the human figure.

a-pol"o-get'ics, 1 ə-pol'o-jet'ıks; 2 a-pŏl'o-gĕt'ics, n. Theol. That department of dogmatics which deals with the defensive facts and proofs of Christianity; the science that purposes to vindicate, by defense or defensive assault, the truth and absoluteness of the Christian religion. Compare THEOLOGY.

Christian apologetics includes (1) fundamental apologetics, comprising the questions embraced in natural theology; (2) historical apologetics, comprising the evidences of the divine origin of Christianity; (3) philosophical apologetics, drawing its materials from the philosophy (a) of religion, (b) of history, and (c) of Christianity itself.

Apologetics does not presuppose either the development of Christianity into its details, or the extraction from it of its essence. The details of Christianity are all contained in Christianity: the minimum of Christianity is just Christianity itself. What apologetics undertakes to establish is just this Christianity itself—including all its 'details' and involving its 'essence'—in its unexplicated and uncompressed entirety, as the absolute religion. New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. i, pp. 234-235. [P. & W. co. '05.]

a-pol'o-gist, 1 ə-pol'o-jist; 2 a-pŏl'o-gĭst, n. One who argues in defense of any person or cause, especially before the public, by speech or writing; specif., a defender of Christianity, especially in the early church.

5. Law. An answer in certain cases to an action for libel, as a defense, or in mitigation of damages. [< LL. apologia, < Gr. apologia, < apo, away, + legō, speak.]

SYN.: acknowledgment, confession, defense, exculpation, excuse, justification, plea, vindication. All these words express one's answer to a charge of wrong or error that is or might be made. Apology has undergone a remarkable change from its old sense of a valiant defense—as in Justin Martyr's Apologies for the Christian faith—to its present meaning of humble confession and concession. He who offers an apology admits himself, at least technically and seemingly, in the wrong. An apology is for what one has done or left undone; an excuse may be for what one purposes to do or leave undone as well; as, one sends beforehand his excuse for not accepting an invitation; if he should fail either to be present or to excuse himself, an apology would be in order. An excuse for a fault is an attempt at partial justification; as, one alleges haste as an excuse for carelessness. Confession is a full acknowledgment of wrong, generally of a grave wrong, with or without apology or excuse. Plea ranges in sense from a prayer for favor or pardon to an attempt at full vindication. Defense, exculpation, justification, and vindication are more properly antonyms than synonyms of apology in its modern sense, and should be so given, but for their connection with its historic usage. See DEFENSE. Compare synonyms for CONFESS.—ANT.: accusation, censure, charge, complaint, condemnation, imputation, injury, insult, offense, wrong.—PREP.: an apology to the guest for the oversight.

a-pol'y-sin, 1 ə-pol'ı-sin; 2 a-pŏl'y-sĭn, n. Chem. A whitish powder made by heating paraphenetidin and citric acid in certain proportions (equal molecules), used as an antiseptic, antineuralgic, and antipyretic. [< Gr. apolysis, loosening.]

ap-par′ent, 1 ə-păr′ent; 2 ă-păr′ĕnt (XIII), a. 1. Clearly perceived or perceivable; easily understood; evident; as, his guilt is apparent.

Overt and apparent virtues bring forth praise.
BACON Works, Essays, Of Fortune in vol. i, p. 293. [H. O. & B. 1871.]

2. Easily seen or to be seen; open to view; visible: as, the beauty of the landscape became apparent.

3. Seeming; ostensible. 4. Philos. Merely phenomenal, as distinguished from and opposed to real. 5†. Probable. [F., < L. apparen(t-)s, ppr. of appareo; see APPEAR.] — ap-par′ent-ness, n.

Syn.: likely, presumable, probable, seeming. The apparent is that which appears, either that which is manifest, visible, certain, or that which is merely in seeming and may be very different from what it is; as, the apparent motion of the sun around the earth. Apparent kindness casts a doubt on the reality of the kindness; apparent neglect implies that more care and pains may have been bestowed than we are aware of. Presumable implies that a thing may be reasonably supposed beforehand without any full knowledge of the facts. Probable implies that we know facts enough to make us moderately confident of it. Seeming expresses great doubt of the reality; seeming innocence comes very near in meaning to probable guilt. Apparent indicates less assurance than probable, and more than seeming. A man's probable intent we believe will prove to be his real intent; his seeming intent we believe to be a sham; his apparent intent may be the true one, tho we have not yet evidence on which to pronounce with certainty or even with confidence. Likely is a word with a wide range of usage, but always implying the belief that the thing is, or will be, true; it is often used with the infinitive, as the other words of this list can not be; as, it is likely to happen. See CLEAR; EVIDENT; MANIFEST; OSTENSIBLE.— Ant.: doubtful, dubious, improbable, unimaginable, unlikely.— Prep.: (when apparent is used in the sense of evident) his guilt is apparent in every act to all observers.

— apparent authority, danger, easement, resistance, etc. See under the nouns.

ap-par′ent, n. [Rare.] An heir apparent. See HEIR.

ap-par′ent-ly, 1 ə-păr′ent-lı; 2 ă-păr′ĕnt-ly, adv. 1. As judged by appearance, without passing on its reality; as far as can be told; seemingly; as, it was apparently three feet long. 2. As plainly evident to the senses; clearly; plainly. [cause to appear.

ap-peal', n. 1. An earnest request for aid, sympathy, or the like; prayer; entreaty; supplication; as, to make an appeal for sufferers by flood; an appeal for pardon.

How purely true, how deeply warm,
The inly-breathed appeal may be. ELIZA COOK Prayer st. 1.

2. A resort to some higher power or final means, for sanction, proof, or aid; as, an appeal to arms.

An appeal to the reason of the people has never been known to fail in the long run. LOWELL Democracy p. 33. [H. M. & CO. 1887.]

3. (1) Law. The carrying of a cause from a lower to a higher tribunal for a rehearing; also, the right to do so.

Carrying a cause up by appeal differs from taking it up on error. By appeal the whole case is retried on its merits both of law and of fact, whereas on error only alleged mistakes in law by the court below are considered.

(2) Old Eng. Law. (a) The accusation of a criminal by an accomplice, who confessed and gave evidence for the state, and who was called an approver; (b) a criminal prosecution by one private person against another for some heinous offense; as, an appeal of treason; an appeal of felony. 4. In any parliamentary body, a reference to the house of a disputed decision made by the chairman. 5†. A challenge. Jesus . . . appeared in an age which is . . . in many respects minutely known to us. FISKE Unseen World p. 67. [H. M. & CO.]

3. To have the semblance or aspect of being; seem, or seem likely: without implying reality or unreality; as, the moon appears quite small; as far as now appears.

Knowledge, like religion, leads us away from what appears to what is. SPAULDING University Education p. 80. [BAL. 1855.]

4. To be plain, obvious, or certain; come to mental view or apprehension; as, what the real fact is does not appear. 5. Law. To come into court in person or by attorney, and submit or object to its jurisdiction in a given cause. [< OF. aperer, < L. appareo, < ad, to, + pareo, come forth.] ap-pere'†.

SYN.: look, seem. Appear refers to that which manifests itself to the senses, look to that toward which the gaze is directed; both are external. Seem applies to what is manifest to the mind on reflection. It suddenly appears to me that there is smoke in the distance; as I watch, it looks like a fire; from my knowledge of the locality and observation of particulars, it seems to me a farmhouse must be burning.— ANT.: be, exist.— PREP.: appear at the front; among the first; on or upon the surface; to the eye; in evidence, in print; from reports; near the harbor; before the public; in appropriate dress; with the insignia of his rank; above the clouds; below the surface; under the lee; over the sea; through the mist; appear for, in behalf of, or against one in court.— to appear in the Gazette [Eng.], to be officially gazetted.

ap-pear'ance, 1 a-pir'əns; 2 ă-pēr'anç, n. 1. External show or semblance, exhibited as in color, shape, dress, or mien; outward seeming or aspect; as, a man of fine appearance. 2. That which appears or seems with no sure basis in fact or truth; semblance; as, an appearance of honesty or goodness.

The great difference, therefore, between a vital and mechanical mind is this, that from one you obtain the reality of things, and from the other the mere appearances. WHIPPLE Success and its Conditions essay iv, p. 97. [O. & CO. 1871.]

3. pl. The aspect of the circumstances collectively; as, appearances are against him.

Always scorn appearances, and you always may. EMERSON Essays, Self-Reliance in first series, p. 53. [H. M. & CO. 1890.]

Appearances justify suspicion,— and . . . suspicion is a just ground of inquiry. JUNIUS Letters vol. i, p. 103. [BELL 1873.]

4. The act of appearing or coming into view; especially, a coming into public view; advent; publication; as, the appearance of the sun dispels darkness; the appearance of a new magazine. 5. An object that appears or is seen, especially an unusual or unnatural one; a phenomenon.

It was quite in keeping with Jewish belief to find indications of great events in the appearances of the heavens.
GEIKIE Life of Christ ch. 11, p. 101. [A. B. EX. 1880.]

6. Law. (1) The coming into court of a party to an action; the being present in court; the coming into court, in person or by a proper representative, of a party proceeded against, in order to answer or object to the action; also, the act or proceeding by which this is done. (2) Scots Law. The stating of a defense. 7. Philos. That which has the semblance of reality to the senses or sense-perception, in contradistinction or opposition to that which is real or demonstrably true. Compare PHENOMENON, REAL; and SEMBLANCE. 8†. Apparent likeness; semblance. That little pensive appendage or tender [the moon] to our fuming engine of an earth. DE. QUINCEY Narrative Papers, On War in vol. ii, p. 222. [T. & T. 1856.]

2. (1) Zool. Any part joined to or diverging from the axial trunk or from any adjunct of it. (2) Bot. A subordinate or subsidiary part, as a limb, tail, leaf, hair, etc.

SYN.: accessory, addendum, addition, adjunct, appendix, appurtenance, auxiliary, extension, supplement. An adjunct (something joined to) constitutes no real part of the thing or system to which it is joined, tho perhaps a valuable addition; an appendage is commonly a real, tho not an essential or necessary part of that with which it is connected; an appurtenance belongs subordinately to something by which it is employed, especially as an instrument to accomplish some purpose. A horse's tail is at once an ornamental appendage and a useful appurtenance; we could not call it an adjunct, tho we might use that word of his iron shoes. An attachment in machinery is some mechanism that can be brought into optional connection with the principal movement; a hammer is a valuable attachment of a sewing-machine. An extension, as of a railroad or of a franchise, carries out further something already existing. See ACCESSORY; APPENDIX; AUXILIARY. ANT.: main body, original, total, whole.— PREP.: that which is thought of as added we call an appendage to; that which is looked upon as an integral part is called an appendage of.

JOSEPH COOK Occident lect. v, p. 166. [H. M. & CO. 1884.]

2. Any addition or appendage; anything accessory or subordinate attached to something else; an accompaniment or adjunct; as, an appendix to royalty.

We think of nature as an appendix to the soul. EMERSON Nature, Addresses and Lectures p. 60. [H. M. & CO. 1889.]

3. Anat. A process or projection; an appendage; a prolongation; especially, the vermiform appendix. See below. 4. A large tube hanging from the lowermost point of the bag or envelop of a spherical or dirigible balloon through which the balloon is inflated and through which gas escapes when ascending rapidly, or through expansion. In the dirigible this usually is tied shut, the gas being automatically released through a valve. [L., < appendo; see APPEND.]

SYN.: addendum, addition, supplement. We add an appendix to a book, as a dictionary, to contain names, dates, lists, etc., which would encumber the text; we add a supplement to supply omissions, as for instance, to bring it up to date. An appendix may be called an addendum; but addendum may be used of a brief note, which would not be dignified by the name of appendix; such notes are often grouped as "addenda." An addition might be matter interwoven in the body of the work, an index, plates, editorial notes, etc., which might be valuable additions, but are not within the meaning of appendix or supplement. See APPENDAGE.— PREP.: to, cf.; rarely, from.

— appendix cerebri, the pituitary body. See PITUITARY. — appendices epiploicæ, saccular processes containing fat attached to the serous covering of the large intestine. See illus. under MESENTERY.— vermiform a. (Anat.), a worm-like organ ordinarily about three or four inches long situated at the very tip of the cæcum, or blind pouch beginning the large intestine of man and some other mammals, which serves no known function. The appendix is located in the lower part of the abdomen on the right side. Its cavity is in the form of a narrow canal and constitutes a favorite site for the deposit of bits of fecal matter which may become hardened and form the so-called "fecal concretions," and also of bacteria of various kinds. . . . The irritation resulting from the presence of this foreign material produces an inflammation of the mucous membrane, which becomes red and swollen. S. E. JELLIFFE in Standard Family Physician p. 142. [F. & W. CO. '07.]

ap-pen'tice, 1 a-pen'tis; 2 ă-pĕn'tic, n. 1. Arch. A penthouse. 2. A sap-shield used in trench work. [< F. appentis, < LL. appendicium, < appendo; see APPEND.] ap-pen'tis†.

Appentice.

Ap"pen-zell', 1 ä'pen-tsel'; 2 ä'pĕn-tsĕl', n. A canton in Switzerland divided into two parts: 1. Ausser Rhoden, 101 sq. m.; capital, Trogen. 2. Inner Rhoden, 61 sq. m.; capital, Appenzell.

ap"per-ceive', 1 ap"ər-sēv'; 2 ăp"ĕr-cēv', rt. [-CEIVED'; -CEIV'ING.] To perceive, as implying conscious attention and a measure of comprehension. [< F. apercevoir; see APPERCEPTION.]

ap"per-cep'tion, 1 ap"ər-sep'shən; 2 ăp"ĕr-cĕp'shon, n. 1. That kind of perception in which the mind is conscious of the act of perceiving; self-consciousness.

Consciousness is . . . ad- or apperception, by which term the same fact is recognized that consciousness implies, viz., a perception of the mind's own states, in addition to the perceptions of the objects of those states. PORTER Human Intellect p. 85. [s. 1890.]

2. Perception as distinguished by more or less of clear recognition, and so of conservation and adjustment of the present object of consciousness to its place in a system of ideas; perception as made clearer by interpretation and recognition. By the act of apperception the object is not only known as a concrete individual, but may be classified with other objects perceived or remembered to have similar qualities. The term was first used with approximately this meaning by Leibnitz, who held, however, that sense-perception is not the sole origin of our knowledge. He speaks, therefore, of apperception as "a knowledge of causes."

With Leibnitz [apperception] indicates: (1) a higher degree of perception—a perception which is distinct, vivid, relatively persistent, in contrast with perceptions which, lacking these qualities, affect the soul only in the mass, and which, as they do not emerge into individual consciousness, may be called unconscious. Encyc. Religion and Ethics vol. i, p. 642. [s. '08.]

The same result of appercelving was explained by Herbart as due to the coalescence of a new idea with a group of old ideas, and its consequent modification by them. That is, with Herbart apperception denotes a process by which a mass of presentations or ideas assimilates comparatively new elements, the whole constituting a system. The importance of the term apperception in the present-day treatment of education and psychology is mainly due to Herbart's influence.

Apperception does not take place in the child or in the savage, because such systems [of ideas] are as yet unformed; it fails also under intoxication, fatigue, passion, etc., because the existing systems are disorganized. Education, intellectual and moral alike, is the gradual formation and strengthening of the due apperceptive masses. . . . Apperception is also the basis of memory: nothing can be recalled unless it has been built into a series or system of ideas, forming links by which the mind may reach it and drag it forth. Encyc. Religion and Ethics vol. i, p. 642. [s. '08.]

By Kant all apperception was considered as brought about by a synthesis of the imagination under the laws imposed upon it by the understanding.

The transcendental unity of apperception, therefore, refers to the pure synthesis of imagination as a condition a priori of the possibility of what is manifold being brought together in a single cognition. KANT Critique of Pure Reason bk. i, ch. 2, sec. 3.

Volkman, Lazarus, and Steinthal widen the range of apperception and identify it with the creative process of mind. Wundt combines the teachings of Leibnitz and Herbart, emphasizing the functional aspect of the attention-process and identifying apperception with will. Stout defines the term as the "process by which a mental system appropriates a new element, or otherwise receives fresh determination," and further distinguishes "negative" and "destructive" apperception.

3. In a wider and unusual sense, the powers of intellect involved in the acquisition, conservation, and elaboration of knowledge; the understanding.

Apperception . . . is the essential mental act in the three great stages of mental generalization, perception, conception, and judgment. J. M. BALDWIN Handb. Psychol. vol. i, p. 65. [s. a. & co. 1890.]

ap"per-cep'tive(es, 1 ap"ər-sep'tiv; 2 ăp"ĕr-cĕp'tiv, a. Of or pertaining to apperception; as, the apperceptive function. —apperceptive signal (Psychophys.), a premonitory signal which warns the observer of the approach of that which he is to attend to or apperceive.

ap"per-cip'i-ent, 1 ap"ər-sip'i-ent; 2 ăp"ĕr-çip'i-ĕnt. Psychol. I. a. Pertaining to apperception, or to one who apperceives. II. n. One who apperceives.

ap-per'ilt, n. Peril; risk.

Ap'per-ley, 1 ap'ər-li; 2 ăp'ĕr-ly, Charles James (1777–8/11 1843). An English author who wrote The Chase, the Turf, and the Road under the pen-name "Nimrod."

ap"per-tain, 1 ap"ər-tēn'; 2 ăp"ĕr-tān', ri. To pertain or belong, as by right, fitness, association, classification, possession, natural relation, or the like; as, free speech appertains to freemen; a house and everything appertaining to it.

As to us surgeons appertaineth, that we do to every wight the best that we can. CHAUCER C. T., Tale of Melibœus ¶ 10.

ap'pe-tence, } 1 ap'ı-tens, -ten-si; 2 ăp'ĕ-tĕnç, -tĕn-çy, ap'pe-ten-cy, } n. [-TEN-CES, -CIES, 1-siz; 2-çiz, pl.] 1. Strong craving or desire, especially for that which gratifies the senses; appetite; propensity; as, appetence for strong drink. 2. Psychol. A mental tendency toward craving for any particular object; desire; also, affection; the principle at the basis of emotion, determining its nature and intensity. As used by Sir Wm. Hamilton, it includes both desires and volitions.

By the word appetence I understand what is commonly but vaguely designated by "motive," "spring of action," "disposition," "inclination," "affection." MCCOSH Emotions bk. i, p. 7. [s. 1880.]

3. Natural tendency; instinct; as, the appetence of ducks for the water. 4. A natural tendency in inorganic matter; affinity, as in atoms and molecules. 5. Biol. The Lamarckian doctrine that changes can be produced in animals by efforts to attain certain ends. [< F. appetence, < L. appetentia, < appetent(-s); see APPETENT.] SYN.: see APPETITE; DESIRE.

ap'pe-tent, 1 ap'ı-tent; 2 ăp'ĕ-tĕnt, a. 1. Eagerly seeking; inclining toward; craving. 2. Pertaining to appetence; impulsive; denoting, in the twofold division of mental faculties and states, all those not distinctly cognitive. HAMILTON Metaph. p. 560. [a. & L. 18'9.] [< L. appeten(t-)s, ppr. of appeto, strive after, < ad, to, + peto, seek.]— ap'pe-tent-ly, adv.

ap'pe-ti-bil(er, 1 ap'ı-ti-bil; 2 ăp'ĕ-ti-bl, a. Capable of exciting or appealing to appetite or desire; furnishing motive. —ap"pe-ti-bil'i-ty, n.— ap'pe-ti-bl(e-ness', n.

ap'pe-titet, rt. To desire; also, to satisfy.— ap'pe-tit"ed, a. [Rare.] Having an appetite.

ap'pe-tite, 1 ap'ı-tait; 2 ăp'ĕ-tīt, n. 1. Any physical craving or desire, normal or acquired, esp. a craving or relish for food; as, the appetites of the flesh. 2. Psychol. That form of animal feeling which is characterized by instinctive craving for what will satisfy the corporeal wants and so preserve life and continue the race; as, the appetites of hunger, thirst, and sex. See FEELING. 3. A craving of the mind; strong liking, desire, or longing, giving mental bent or tendency; as, an appetite for art.

Of all the passions and appetites, the love of power is of the most imperious . . . nature. GIBBON Rome vol. i, p. 103. [n. 1877.]

4. [Archaic.] (1) Natural tendency, as of a plant or of something inanimate. (2) The object of a craving or propensity. (3) An appetizer. [< F. appétit, < L. appetitus, < appeto; see APPETENT.] ap'pe-tyt†.

SYN.: appetency, craving, desire, disposition, impulse, inclination, longing, lust, passion, proclivity, proneness, propensity, thirst, zest. Appetite is used only of the demands of the physical system, unless otherwise expressly stated, as when we say an appetite for knowledge; passion includes all excitable impulses of our nature, as anger, fear, love, hatred, etc. Appetite is thus more animal than passion; and when we speak of passions and appetites as conjoined or contrasted, we think of the appetites as wholly physical and of the passions as, in part, at least, mental or spiritual. We say an appetite for food, a passion for fame. See DESIRE; RELISH.— ANT.: antipathy, aversion, detestation, disgust, dislike, disrelish, distaste, hatred, indifference, loathing, repugnance.— PREP.: for.

ap'pe-ti"tive, } Of, pertaining to, or like an appetite; having an appetite; as, an appetitive power.

The appetitive soul is possessed also by plants. UEBERWEG Hist. Philos. tr. by Morris, vol. i, pt. i, period ii, p. 124. [s. 1872.]

2. Appetizing.

ap'pe-tize, 1 ap'ı-taiz; 2 ăp'ĕ-tīz, rt. [-TIZED; -TIZ'ING.] To excite appetite in; give (a person) an appetite.

Appetize is treated, in the Dictionaries, as if Sir Walter Scott may have introduced it into literature. It is found in Urquhart's Translation of Rabelais (ed. 1694), Bk. 2, p. 196.

SHAKESPEARE Macbeth act v, sc. 3, l. 50.

2. To express approval of in any way; commend.

II. i. To clap the hands in approbation; hence, to give expression to praise or approval; as, the audience applauded. [< L. applaudo, < ad, to, + plaudo, strike.]

SYN.: cheer, eulogize, extol, laud, praise. See ADMIRE; PRAISE.— ANT.: belittle, curse, decry, defame, denounce, execrate.— PREP.: I applaud you for your courage; applauded by the audience at intervals.— ap-plaud'er, n.— ap-plaud'ing-ly, adv.

ap-plause't, rt. To applaud.

ap-plause', 1 a-plōz'; 2 ă-plȧs', n. 1. The act of applauding; the signification of approval by clapping the hands, shouting, or the like.

Th' applause of . . . senates to command. GRAY Elegy st. 16.

2. Any approval or praise, especially when expressed openly.

Triumph, applause, acclamation, are dear to the mind of man. ADDISON Spectator Sept. 17, 1711.

3†. The object or recipient of approval or praise. [< L. applausus, pp. of applaudo; see APPLAUD.]

SYN.: acclaim, acclamation, cheering, cheers, encomium, eulogy, laudation, plaudit, praise. Praise is the expressed and hearty approval of an individual, or of a number or multitude, one by one; applause, the spontaneous outburst of all at once. Applause is expressed in many ways, by stamping of feet, clapping of hands, waving of handkerchiefs, etc., as well as by the voice; acclamation is strictly by the voice alone. Thus one is chosen moderator by acclamation when he receives a unanimous viva voce vote; we could not say he was nominated by applause. Acclaim is the more poetic term for acclamation, commonly understood in a loftier sense; as, a nation's acclaim. Plaudit is a shout of applause, and is commonly used in the plural; as, the plaudits of a throng. Applause is also used in the general sense of praise. See EULOGY; PRAISE.— ANT.: contempt, denunciation, hissing, obloquy, scorn, vituperation.— ap-plause't, rt. To applaud.— ap-plause'ful†, a.— -ly†, adv.— ap-plaus'i-ble†, a. ap-plaus'a-ble†.— ap-plaus'i-ve(s, a. 1. Expressing or containing applause. 2†. Deserving applause.— ap-plaus'i-ve(-ly†, adv. By means of or in the manner of applause.

Eng.] A wasp. See APPLE-DRONE.— a.-berry, n. [Austral.] The berry of a climbing evergreen shrub (Billardiera scandens) of the pittosporad family (Pittosporaceæ). It is elliptical or cylindrically ovoid in shape, two-celled, and has many seeds. The pulp is usually resinous and subacid.— a. black-rot, a disease of the apple and quince in America, due to a parasitic fungus (Sphæropsis malorum) whose mycelium by permeating and destroying the skin dries up and mummifies it. — a.-blight, n. A disease of the apple-tree, of bacterial origin; twig-blight.— a.-borer, n. A cerambycid beetle (Saperda candida) common in the United States, the larva of which bores in the wood of the apple, pear, and other trees.— a.-twig borer, a small beetle (Amphicrus bicaudatus) which bores into the twigs of apple and other fruit-trees. — a. brandy [U. S.], see BRANDY, n., 2.— a.-bug, n. The plum-weevil (Conotrachelus nenuphar).— a. butter, a thick, brown spiced apple-sauce made by stewing apples slowly in fresh cider.— a.-canker, n. See CANKER, n., 4.— a. cheese, same as POMACE, 1.— a.-coal, n. [Scot.] Soft or loose coal which is easily mined and breaks into small apple-like lumps.— a.-curculio, n. Same as APPLE-WEEVIL. — a.-disease, n. A blight or rot affecting apples. Among these are: apple-canker, bark-canker, bin-rot, bitter-rot, black mold, black rot, black-spot canker, blight, blister-canker, blotch, blue mold, brown rot, canker, clitocybose, coniothyriose, crown-gall, European canker, flyspeck, fruit-rot, fruit-spot, hypochnose, illosporiose, leaf-spot, ozoniose, Pacific-coast canker, pink rot, podosphærose, powdery mildew, ripe-rot, root-rot, rust, scab, scurf, soft rot, sooty blotch, sphærothecose, volutellose, wood-rot.— a.-drone, n. [Local, Eng.] A wasp. a.-dranet.— a. family, a natural family of trees or shrubs, the Malaceæ, formerly included in the rose family (Rosaceæ), but now set apart on account of the fruit, which is a more or less fleshy pome. The apples, pears, mountain-ashes, and hawthorns are the most familiar representatives.— a.-fly, n. One of various flies, as Trypeta pomonella, whose larvæ eat apples.— a.-gall, n. Same as APPLE OF SODOM.— a.-governor, n. A thin cake of bread-dough laid over sliced apples in a pipkin, and light-baked.— a.-gum, n. [Austral.] Bot. A tree (Eucalyptus stuartiana) resembling the European apple-tree, whence its name. Called also apple-scented gum, from the odor of its blossoms.— a.-haw, n. A small tree (Crataegus axillaris) of the rose family (Rosaceæ).

of the southern United States, with globular red fruit.— a.-headed, a. Rounded or domed. said of a dog whose skull is prominent.— ap'ple-jack", n. [U. S.] Apple brandy; cider brandy.— a.-John†, n. A variety of apple ripening about St. John's day, said to keep two years and considered perfect in flavor only when shriveled and withered.— a.-leather, n. [Local, U. S.] The paste of partly cooked apples when sun-dried. F. Dict.— a.-maggot, n. The larva of the apple-fly.— a.-midge, n. A midge (Sciara mali) whose larvæ infest apples.— a. mose, an edible made of the pulp of stewed apples, sugar, etc.— a.-moth, n. A lepidopterous insect whose larvæ infest apples; especially, the codling-moth.— a. of Caln, the strawberry-tree (Arbutus unedo).— a. of discord, the golden apple thrown by Eris, the goddess of discord, among the goddesses Juno, Minerva, and Venus, and awarded by Paris to Venus, as the fairest of them, thus causing Juno's wrath against Troy and the Trojans.— a. of Granada (Her.), the pomegranate. — a. of Peru, an annual Peruvian herb (Nicandra physaloides) of the nightshade family (Solanaceæ).— a. of Sodom, an apple said by the ancients to grow near the Dead Sea and to be beautiful outwardly, but when plucked to turn to ashes; hence, anything deceptive and disappointing. See SODOM-APPLE.— a. of the eye, the pupil or center of the eye; hence, anything very dear or highly esteemed.— a.-oil, n. An alcoholic dilution of ethyl or amyl valerianate, having an apple-like aroma, and used extensively in confectionery and in syrups for soda-fountain use.— a.-peru, n. 1. The Jamestown weed. 2. [Local, U. S.] The garden rhubarb: commonly so called in Maine.— a.-pie, n. The hairy willow-herb. See WILLOW-HERB.— a.-pie order [Colloq.], perfect order; neatness.— a.-rot, n. A disease, as of apples, caused by the parasitic fungus Glœosporium fructigenum, appearing first as brown sunken spots resembling decay, but quite firm, which soon bear white or pinkish pustules, turning black. Called also ripe-rot, because, beginning on half-grown fruit, it matures only when the fruit is ripe, making rapid progress in stored fruits; and apple bitter-rot, on account of the bitter taste of the affected portion. It attacks also grapes, peaches, pears, and egg-plants.— a. saw-fly, a British saw-fly (Hoplocampa testudinea), highly injurious to young fruit.— a.-scab, n. An apple-tree disease due to a parasitic ascomycetous fungus (Fusicladium dendriticum) affecting shoots, leaves, and fruit. It appears first as dirty greenish spots, which increase in size, run together, and become large, irregular, nearly black blotches, giving rise to the additional name black-spot.— a.-scale, n. Any of several species of scale-insect injurious to apple-trees.— a.-shell, n. Any of the large globular edible snails of the family Ampullaridæ. a.-snail‡.— a.-shrub, n. [Prov. Eng.] The flowering shrub weigelia.— a.-smeller, n. [Local, U. S.] A whirligig beetle (Gyrinus natator). — a.-sphinx, n. A sphingid moth (Sphinx gordius) whose larva feeds on apple-leaves in the eastern United States and Canada. — a.-squire, n. 1. A page of a courtezan. 2. A wittol. 3. A lemman; pimp.— a.-thrips, n. A very small thysanopterous insect (Phlœothrips mali) which is sometimes found on withered apples.— a.-tree, n. 1. Any tree bearing apples. 2. [Austral.] The apple-gum.— a.-tree canker, see CANKER, 4.— a.-tree hydnum, a large fleshy, irregularly tubercled fungus (Hydnum schiedermayeri), with tufts of pendulous awl-shaped spines, frequently fatal to apple-trees. It develops under and kills the bark, growing several feet as an irregular fleshy mass, and protrudes through cracks, forming its sporocarps on the outer surface.— a.-weevil, n. A weevil of the genus Anthonomus (A. quadrigibbus) which attacks apples.— a.-worm, n. A lepidopterous larva that infests apples, as that of the codling-moth (Carpocapsa pomonella). The lesser apple-worm is the larva of a small moth (Enarmonia prunivora) infesting apples and other fruits.— Argyle a., one of two eucalypts (Eucalyptus pulverulenta and E. cinerea) found in Australia and sometimes cultivated for ornament.— bitter a., the colocynth (Citrullus colocynthis). — black a. [Austral.], the native or wild plum (Achras australis). brush-a.‡.— Carthaginian a., the pomegranate. — Chinese flowering a., a Chinese apple-tree (Malus spectabilis) with narrowly oval, slender-stalked leaves and reddish-yellow sour fruit, cultivated chiefly for its ornamental deep-pink single or double blossoms.— dwarf a., an apple of any variety budded or grafted on natural dwarf Paradise or Doucin stock.— earth a. 1. The Jerusalem artichoke. 2. The potato.— e'mu-ap"ple, n. [Austral.] 1. A tree (Owenia acidula) of the bead-tree family (Meliaceæ). 2. One of the trees known as bitter-bark (Petalostigma quadriloculare), of the spurge family (Euphorbiaceæ). — golden a. 1. Same as BENGAL QUINCE. 2. Same as HOG-PLUM, 1. 3. The tomato.— Jamaica a., the cherimoya.— kaju a. [India], the cashew-nut.— many-dotted a.-worm, the larva of a noctuid moth (Balsa malana) which feeds on the apple-leaf.— mooley-a., n. Same as EMU-APPLE, 1.— seven-year a., the apple-like fruit of a large shrub (Genipa dusifolia) of the madder family, found in the West Indies and Florida.— Sodom-a., n. 1. The fruit of any one of several shrubs or trees growing in the vicinity of the Dead Sea, and supposed to be the fruit mentioned by Josephus as the a. of Sodom; especially, the fruit of a stiff-branched spiny shrub (Solanum sodomæum) of the nightshade family (Solanaceæ). 2. [U. S.] A closely allied prickly weed (Solanum mammosum) of the southern U. S. and the West Indies, with yellow fruit; also, its kindred northern weed, the horse-nettle.— woolly a.-louse, an aphid (Schizoneura americana). See BLIGHT, n., 4.

Many self-explaining or easily explained compounds have apple as the first element; as, a.-cart, a.-corer, a.-faced, a.-green, a.-parer, a.-pulp, a.-slicer, a.-yard (an orchard), etc.

Apple-snail (Ampullaria). s, siphon; o, operculum.

The gratification which wealth can bestow is . . . in the wise application of it.

CERVANTES' Don Quixote tr. by Jervas, pt. ii, p. 395. [r. & c.]

2. That which is applied or laid on, especially as a remedial agent; as, the application soothed the pain. 3. That by which one applies; especially, a formal written request or demand; a requisition; as, an application for supplies. 4. The testing or carrying into effect of a general law, truth, or precept by bringing it into relation with practical affairs or applying it to a particular case; also, the capacity of being thus used, or means of result of such action; as, the application of the Sermon on the Mount to daily life.

And liberal applications lie In Art like Nature, dearest friend.
TENNYSON Day-Dream, Moral st. 2.

5. The employment of the principles of one science to enlarge or perfect another, or a device for such purpose; as, the steam-engine is an application of thermodynamics. 6. The fixing of the attention closely on that upon which one is engaged; also, the habit or capability of so fixing it; as, a man of close application.

Steady application to work is the healthiest training for every individual. SMILES Self-Help ch. 2, p. 48. [n. 1874.]

7. Logic. The denoting or extending of a term, or the presenting of a proposition in such manner that it combines logical strength with correctness of form. 8. Astrol. Approach, as of a planet to an aspect. 9. Law. Appropriation to a particular use, purpose, or demand; also, a request or motion to a court or judge. II. i. 1. To make formal request; petition; ask; as, to apply for a position.

In 1819, when Missouri applied to be admitted into the Union as a state, a sharp contest broke out in Congress. BRYCE Am. Commonwealth vol. i, pt. iii, ch. 53, p. 645. [MACM. 1885.]

2. To have recourse for aid; betake oneself; as, to apply to the king. 3. To have reference or appropriate relation; belong naturally; be adapted; fit; as, this applies to all men; to apply closely. 4. [Rare.] To devote or set oneself closely or with care and attention. 5†. (1) To comply. (2) To arrive. (3) To be near. [< OF. aplier, < L. applico, < ad, to, + plico, fold.] ap-plie'ţ.

SYN: see APPEAL; ATTACH.— PREP.: apply to a person for a position; apply the varnish to the surface with a brush.

ap"pog-gia'to, 1 ăp'po-jä'to; 2 ăp'po-jä'to, a. & adv. [It.] Mus. Sustained; so as to be continued without any break: often as a direction to the performer.

ap-pog"gia-tu'ra, 1 ap-poj'ə-tū'rə; 2 ăp-pōj'ă-tu'rä, n. [It.] Mus. A musical ornament consisting of a single note introduced as a suspension before any note of a melody. Compare GRACE-NOTE, under GRACE. a-pog"ia-tu'raţ. There are two kinds of appoggiaturas: (1) the long, which is accented and borrows its time from the following note; and (2) the short, which is unaccented and represented by either an eighth or a sixteenth note with an oblique stroke crossing its stem. The modern tendency seems to be to take the time of the short appoggiatura from the preceding note, except where this would lead to false progressions.— double appoggiatura (Mus.), a melodic ornament consisting of two grace-notes preceding a principal note, the time required for both being deducted from the latter.

ap-point', 1 a-point'; 2 ă-point', v. I. t. 1. To designate, fix upon, or select as being the person or subject for some position, object, or the like; assign; as, to appoint a postmaster.

I imagined it was with Work alone, and not also with Folly and Sin, in myself and others, that I have been appointed to struggle. CARLYLE Sartor Resartus p. 104. [L. co.]

2. Law. (1) To nominate or constitute, as an executor or guardian, by will. (2) To designate (a person) by virtue of a right arising under a deed or will to enjoy the use of lands. 3. To decide upon, as from among various times or places that might be selected; arrange; fix; as, to appoint a time or a meeting.

There was a large plain appointed for this purpose.
ADDISON Spectator June 23, 1714.

4. To fix, establish, or ordain, as by decree, order, or proclamation; command; prescribe; as, to appoint the bounds of life; to appoint a fast.

Impatient of our Father's time And his appointed way.
WHITTIER Cypress-Tree of Ceylon st. 10.

It is one notable effect of a life passed on shipboard to destroy weak beliefs in appointed forms of religion.
RUSKIN Modern Painters vol. v, pt. ix, ch. 3, p. 228. [w. 1860.]

The bound of man's appointed years. BRYANT Old Man's Funeral st. 4.

5. To provide with necessary or desirable fittings or equipments; fit out; furnish; equip; as, the house is miserably appointed: used now only in the past participle. 6†. To point to; point out. 7†. To blame.

II. i. 1. To decree or ordain the doing of a particular thing; as, when God appoints, we must obey. 2. Law. To use the appointing power. 3†. To come or bring matters to a point. [< F. appointer, < LL. appuncto, repair, < ad, to, + punctum; see POINT.] ap-poynt'ţ.

[AIGUISÉ. ap-poin-tēe'ţ.

ap"poin-tē', 1 a'poin-tē'; 2 ă'poin-tē', a. Her. Pointed. See ap-point'ment, 1 a-point'ment or -mənt; 2 ă-point'ment, n. 1. The act of appointing, the state of being appointed, or that which is appointed. Especially: (1) An appointing or being appointed to fill an office, render a service, execute a trust, receive an honor or benefit, or the like; also, the office or position to be filled, the service to be rendered, etc.

He hesitated long to accept this appointment because there was a salary attached to it. JAS. PARTON People's Biography, John Howard p. 64. [A. n. 1869.]

(2) An agreement or arrangement, as to do something, be somewhere, or meet some one at a given time; also, the thing to be done, the meeting or time of meeting, etc.; an engagement; as, I have an appointment for that day. 2. The act of directing, commanding, ordaining, or establishing, or that which is ordained or fixed; direction; decree; ordinance; as, the divine appointment. 3. Anything appointed for use or adornment, etc.; equipment; accouterment; furnishing: usually in the plural; as, the appointments of a fleet or a room. 4. Law. A power or right to control or designate the disposition of property. 5. [Archaic.] Preparation. 6†. An allowance, perquisite, or salary.

—power of appointment, authority conferred, as by power of attorney, deed, or will, to appoint or designate persons for some specified purpose.— public a., an official station in the service of the government to which persons may be appointed under authority conferred by law.

Ap"po-mat'tox, 1 ap'ə-mat'əks; 2 ăp'o-măt'oks, n. 1. A river in Virginia; 150 m. long to James river. 2. A county in Virginia; 342 sq. m.; county-seat, West Appomattox. At Appomattox Court House, in this county, Lee surrendered to Grant, April 9, 1865.

ap-portţ', tt. To bring; produce.— ap-port'a-bleţ, a.— ap-port'er†, n. An importer; a procurer.

ap-port', 1 a-pōrt' or (F.) ă'pōr'; 2 ă-pōrt' or (F.) ă'pōr', n. Spiritualism. The appearance of flowers, fruit, hands, etc.: a phenomenon common at materializing séances.

I take it for granted that the two birds were not the only apports you received. THOS. W. STANFORD in Harbinger of Light Melbourne, May 1, '10.

ap-por'tion, 1 a-pōr'shən; 2 ă-pōr'shon, tt. To divide proportionally; portion out equitably; adjust; as, to apportion lands, profits, or expenses. [< OF. apportionner, < à (< L. ad), to, + portionner, < portion; see PORTION.]

SYN: allot, appoint, appropriate, assign, deal, dispense, distribute, divide, grant, share. To allot or assign may be to make an arbitrary division; the same is true of distribute or divide. That which is apportioned is given by some fixed rule, which is meant to be uniform and fair; as, representatives are apportioned among the States according to population. To dispense is to give out freely; as, the sun dispenses light and heat. A thing is appropriated to or for a specific purpose (to which it thus becomes proper, in the original sense of being its own); money appropriated by Congress for one purpose can not be expended for any other. One may apportion what he only holds in trust; he shares what is his own. See ALLOT.— Ant.: cling to, collect, consolidate, divide arbitrarily, gather together, keep together, receive, retain.— Prep.: apportion to each a fair amount; apportion the property among the heirs, between two claimants; apportion according to numbers, etc.

ap-por'tion-ment, 1 a-pōr'shŏn-ment or -ment; 2 ă-pōr'shon-ment, n. 1. The act, process, or result of apportioning; just or equitable division, assignment, or allotment, as of property, shares, expenses, duties, or privileges. 2. [U. S.] The assignment of representatives or taxes, or the arrangement and determination of electoral districts, on the basis of population, as after each census.

Syn.: allotment, assignment, distribution.

ap-pose', 1 a-pōz'; 2 ă-pōz', vt. [AP-POSED'; AP-POS'ING.] 1. To place or bring near; apply; as, to appose food before a person. 2. To arrange side by side; juxtapose. [< F. apposer (for L. appono; see APPOSITE), < a (< L. ad), to, + poser; see POSE1, v.] —ap-pos'a-bl(eF, a.

ap-pos'er, 1 a-pōz'ər; 2 ă-pōz'er, n. [Archaic.] An examiner; especially, before 1833, an officer of the English exchequer who audited the sheriffs' accounts.

ap'po-site, } 1 ap'o-zit; 2 ăp'o-ṣit, a. 1. Fit for or well ap'po-sitş, } adapted to the purpose; appropriate; pertinent; apt; as, an apposite simile. 2. Placed or being in apposition: opposed. 3†. Ready in speech or repartee. [< L. appositus, pp. of appono, place by, < ad, to, + pono, place.] Syn.: see APT.— ap'po-site-ly, adv.— ap'po-site-ness, n.

That magic of language and apposiiteness of imagery for which he [Shakespeare] stands pre-eminent.

ap"po-si'tion, 1 ap'o-zish'ən; 2 ăp'o-ṣish'on, n. 1. Gram. The relation between two or more nouns or their equivalents in the same case and denoting the same person or thing, when all are in the subject or all in the predicate and where one is in attributive or complementary relation.

Any or all of the appositive forms may be nouns, pronouns, or substantive clauses, and the one following serves generally to explain or amplify that which precedes, as in the clauses "I, John, the King"; "James, my son"; "Henry VIII., Defender of the Faith."

2. The act of placing side by side, together, or in contact; state, position, or fact of juxtaposition; addition.

It [evil] hangs, a huge blot in the universe, until the orb of divine love rises behind it. In that apposition we detect its meaning. E. H. CHAPIN Living Words p. 90. [A. T. 1860.]

3. Surg. (1) Growth of tissue or increase of parts by juxtaposition. (2) The act of bringing divided parts into their normal relations, or the state of being so restored. 4. [A-] The "Speech day" at St. Paul's school, Hammersmith, London. [< LL. appositio(n-), < L. appono; see APPOSITE.] — growth by apposition (Bot.), growth in thickness of cell-walls and increase in bulk of starch-grains, thought to be brought about by deposition of new particles or lamina upon the inner face of the cell-walls and upon the exterior of the starch-grains.— ap"po-si'tion-al, a. 1. Gram. Of or pertaining to apposition; as, an appositional construction. 2. Bot. Lying together and partially united, as the branches of algæ.— -ly, adv.

ap-pos'i-tive, } 1 a-poz'i-tiv; 2 ă-pōş'i-tiv. I. a. 1.
ap-pos'i-tivs, } Gram. Pertaining to or construed in apposition. 2. Apposite. II. n. A word or clause in apposition. [< L. appositus; see APPOSITE.] — -ly, adv.

ap-prais'al, 1 a-prēz'əl; 2 ă-prāş', n. The act of appraising; valuation; especially official valuation, as of an estate, etc.

ap-praise', 1 a-prēz'; 2 ă-prāş', vt. [AP-PRAISED'; AP-PRAIS'ING.] 1. To estimate the money value of; set a price or value on, especially by authority of law or agreement of interested parties; as, to appraise a stock of goods. 2. To estimate the amount, quality, or worth of; judge. 3. [Rare.] To speak well of; praise. [< OF. apreiier, < LL. appretio, < L. ad, to, + pretium, price.] —ap-prais'a-bl(eF, a.

ap-praise'ment, 1 a-prēz'ment or -mənt; 2 ă-prāş'ment, n. 1. The act of valuing, especially by an authorized or official appraiser; appraisal. 2. The estimated worth of property appraised.

Official appraisements in legal proceedings are regulated generally by statute. New Int. Encyc. p. 675. [D. M. & CO. '05.]

ap-prais'er, 1 a-prēz'ər; 2 ă-prāş'er, n. 1. One who estimates or appraises; especially, one legally designated to estimate the value of property; as, town appraisers. 2. Insur. A person selected to ascertain the amount of a loss by fire. Where the question is in dispute, the insurance company selects one, the insured a second, and these two choose a third person as umpire.— Board of United States General Appraisers, a board of appraisers appointed by the government with full power to hear and determine all cases and questions that may be assigned to it in the operation of the Tariff Act. Nine general appraisers in all are appointed, three of whom are on duty daily at the port of New York.

The boards of general appraisers and the members thereof shall have and possess all the powers of a circuit court of the United States in preserving order, compelling the attendance of witnesses, and the production of evidence, and in punishing for contempt. U. S. Tarif Act of Aug. 5, '09, p. 99.

ap-prec'i-a-ble, } 1 a-prī'shi-a-bl; 2 ă-prē'shi-a-bl, a.
ap-pre'ci-a-blE, } Capable of being appreciated, estimated, or discerned by the senses or intellect; perceptible; as, an appreciable addition.

When the collector of dead facts . . . fails to make clear any appreciable effects which these facts can produce on human welfare, he is obliged to admit that they are comparatively valueless.
SPENCER Education ch. I, p. 30. [A. 1859.]

A fact which subtends an appreciable angle in the horizon of thought. HOLMES Professor p. 21. [L. 1864.]

ap-pre'ci-a-bly, 1 a-prī'shi-a-bli; 2 ă-prē'shi-a-bly, adv. By an appreciable amount; in or to an appreciable degree. [Appreciative.

ap-pre'ci-ant, 1 a-prī'shi-ənt; 2 ă-prē'shi-ant, a. [Rare.]

ap-pre'ci-ate, 1 a-prī'shi-ēt; 2 ă-prē'shi-āt, v. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] I. t. 1. To be fully aware of or alive to the value, importance, or worth of; esteem adequately or highly; see the full import of; as, to appreciate a gift or one's opportunities.

To appreciate a man's work at the full, . . . it is well to know the man himself, his circumstances, and the incidents of his career. PLUTARCH Lives ed. by B. J. Snell, p. 9. [W. S. 1886.]

2. To be keenly sensible of or sensitive to; have the power of sharply discriminating in reference to; adequately perceive or distinguish; as, to appreciate differences of color, of musical pitch, etc. 3. To cause to become greater in price or value; enhance the degree or force of; as, the resumption of specie payment appreciates the currency: opposed to depreciate. 4. To estimate the worth of; rate; as, the ancients appreciated all knowledge by a high standard.

II. i. To increase in value; rise in price; as, real estate appreciates as the city grows. [< LL. appreciatus, pp. of appretio, < L. ad, to, + pretium, price.]

ap-pre'ci-atę.

Syn.: esteem, estimate, prize, value. A jeweler estimates a diamond as worth so much cash; the owner may value it beyond all price, as a family heirloom, or he may prize it as the gift of an esteemed friend, without at all appreciating its commercial value. See ADMIRE.— Ant.: depreciate, despise, misjudge, scorn, undervalue.

ap-pre'ci-at"ing-ly, 1 a-prī'shi-ēt'iŋ-li; 2 ă-prē'shi-āt'ing-ly, adv. With appreciation.

ap-pre"ci-a'tion, 1 a-prī'shi-ē'shən; 2 ă-prē'shi-ā'shon, n. 1. The act of appreciating; true or adequate apprehension or estimation, as of qualities, merit, or value; sympathetic recognition of excellence; as, appreciation of home.

All true appreciation is the result of keen insight and noble passion. BLACKIE Self-Culture p. 93. [S. 1874.]

2. Susceptibility or sensitiveness to delicate distinctions; keen perception as to points not obvious; as, appreciation of minute differences in length. 3. The act of placing an estimate upon persons or things; conclusion or judgment on any point; as, to be mistaken in the appreciation of one's character. 4. Increase in price or value; added monetary worth; as, the appreciation of real estate. 5. [Rare.] Valuation; appraisement. Syn.: see RELISH.

ap-pre'ci-a-tive, } 1 a-prī'shi-ə-tiv; 2 ă-prē'shi-a-tiv, a.
ap-pre'ci-a-tivs, } Having or manifesting appreciation; as, an appreciative critic. ap-pre'ci-a-to-ry†.— ap-pre'ci-a-tiv(e-lys, ap-pre'ci-a-to"ri-ly, adv.— ap-pre'ci-a-tiv(e-nesss, n.

ap-pred'i-cate, 1 a-pred'i-kēt; 2 ă-prĕd'i-cāt, n. Logic. The copula considered as separate from the remainder of the predicate. HAMILTON Logic p. 161. [G. & L. 1865.] [< AD- + PREDICATE, n.] ap"pre-hend', 1 ap'ri-hend'; 2 ăp're-hĕnd', v. I. t. 1. To lay hold of with the mind; grasp with the understanding and bring toward one so as to assimilate; cognize; as, to apprehend the situation.

The words nature and supernatural . . . have a meaning fixed and well apprehended in the popular judgment.
E. H. SEARS Fourth Gospel prelim., p. 7. [N. H. 1872.]

2. To have a mental impression of; know partially; hold opinions concerning; imagine; as, to apprehend an abstruse subject: opposed to comprehend. 3. To look forward to; anticipate with distrust or suspicion; as, to apprehend disaster; to apprehend a hard winter.

As there is nothing which persons lay hold of more readily than that aspect of a subject in which it presents matter for fear, 'to apprehend' has acquired the sense of to regard with fear.
TRENCH Select Glossary p. 10. [S. P. & CO. 1890.]

4. To discover by observation; note. 5. To have a sensible impression or perception of. 6. To make a prisoner of (a person) in the name of the law; arrest by warrant; as, to apprehend a thief.

By the Fugitive Slave Law every Northern man was obliged when properly summoned to turn out and help apprehend the runaway slave of a Southern man.
U. S. GRANT Personal Memoirs vol. ii, p. 543. [C. L. W. 1885.]

7†. To take hold of.

II. i. 1. To think or suppose anything to be or to be so; opine; surmise; conjecture; as, the truth, I apprehend, lies in quite another direction. 2. To look forward with foreboding; fear; as, it is foolish to apprehend. 3. To grasp with the intellect, as a truth, thought, or statement; perceive; as, she apprehends with great clearness. [< F. appréhender, < L. apprehendo, < ad, to, + prehendo, seize.] ap-prend'†.

Syn.: comprehend, conceive, perceive, understand. We perceive what is presented through the senses. We apprehend what is presented to the mind whether through the senses or by any other means. Yet perceive is used in the figurative sense of seeing through to a conclusion, in a way for which usage would not allow us to substitute apprehend; as, "Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet," John iv, 19. That which we apprehend we catch, as with the hand; that which we conceive we are able to analyze and recompose in our mind; that which we comprehend we, as it were, grasp around, take together, seize, embrace wholly within the mind. Many things may be apprehended which can not be comprehended; a child can apprehend the distinction between right and wrong, yet the philosopher can not comprehend it in its fulness. We can apprehend the will of God as revealed in conscience or the Scripture; we can conceive of certain attributes of Deity, as his truth and justice; but no finite intelligence can comprehend the Divine Nature, in its majesty, power, and perfection. See ANTICIPATE; ARREST; CATCH; KNOW.— Ant.: fail of, ignore, lose, misapprehend, misconceive, miss, overlook.

—ap"pre-hend'er, n. 1. One who arrests legally. 2. One who grasps mentally.— ap"pre-hend'ing-ly, adv.— ap"pre-hen'si-bl(eF, a. Capable of being conceived or apprehended.— ap"pre-hen'si-bil'i-ty, n.— ap"pre-hen'si-bly, adv.

ap"pre-hen'sion, 1 ap'ri-hen'shən; 2 ăp're-hĕn'shon, n. 1. A mental presentation to oneself of what may happen in the future, esp. as coupled with the expectation or fear that it may prove calamitous; distrust or dread concerning the future; apprehensiveness; as, apprehension of danger.

Apprehension always paints in black.
LEW WALLACE Ben-Hur bk. v, p. 383. [H.]

2. The act of apprehending mentally; also, the state of being apprehended, or that which is apprehended.

Apprehension has been used to express almost any and every mental act or state, as intellection in general, cognition, understanding, conception, attention, memory, retention, imagination: formerly, also, emotion or sensibility.

For apprehension may be considered as an act of the understanding as well as a mere act of the fantasy.
MCCOSH First Truths p. 155. [S. 1889.]

MARTINEAU Essays p. 27. [W. T. S. 1866.]

3. The result of taking in or grasping mentally; the formation of an intelligent estimate or idea, or the idea so formed; notion; opinion; as, a common apprehension.

All the persons [in Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress] are to our apprehension not shadows, but beings of flesh and blood.
CRAIK Eng. Lit. vol. i, p. 528. [S. 1877.]

4. The faculty or power that apprehends; capacity to apprehend, or ability to receive and assimilate; as, a man of large apprehension. 5. Law. The seizure of a person, vessel, etc., on a criminal charge; the act of declaring to be seized by the law; arrest; as, a warrant for one's apprehension. 6. Immediate cognition by the mind. Specif.: (1) In logic, simple apprehension. See phrase below. (2) Philos. Knowledge gained immediately or intuitively, or the act of gaining such knowledge. By the word apprehension the scholastics understood knowledge through mentally grasping the essential idea of a thing. Kant used it of that mental act which imparts to the perceptions of sense the a priori forms of space and time. 7. [Rare.] The act of grasping or seizing physically; prehension. 8†. A mental image; fantasm: long a prevalent English use. [< L. apprehensio(n-), < apprehendo, APPREHEND.]

ap-pren'sion†.

Syn.: see ALARM; ANTICIPATION; ANXIETY; CONCEPTION; FEAR; IDEA; KNOWLEDGE.— Prep.: of.— Implicit apprehension (Psychol.), apprehension of a composite idea or group as a whole, without discerning the details or elements composing it.— simple a., the act of the mind by which it receives a simple notion, as white, round, distinguished from the formation of a judgment, as this is white, or round.

ap"pre-hen'sive, } 1 ap'ri-hen'siv; 2 ăp're-hĕn'siv, a.
ap"pre-hen'sivs, } 1. Anticipative of evil; disquieted in mind by uncertainty or anxiety as to the future; fearful; as, apprehensive of the issue.

Mozart was painfully apprehensive at the thought of death.
E. E. HALE Lights of Two Centuries p. 327. [A. S. B. 1887.]

2. Seizing quickly with the mind; apprehending readily.

And give the Mind that apprehensive power
By which she is made quick to recognize The moral properties and scope of things.
WORDSWORTH Excursion bk. i, st. 8.

3. [Rare.] Quickly responsive to sense-impressions, as of pleasure, pain, etc.; sensitive. 4. Having cognizance or knowledge; conscious; sensible. 5. Inclined to doubt or suspect; suspicious. 6. Metaph. Of or pertaining to simple apprehension. 7†. Apprehensible. Syn.: see AFRAID; ANXIOUS.— Prep.: apprehensive of danger; for one's safety, welfare, etc.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

ap-pren'tice, } 1 a-pren'tis; 2 ă-prĕn'tiç, vt. [-TICED, ap-pren'tiss, } -TIST'S; -TIC-ING, -TIS-ING'S.] To indenture as or put in the position of an apprentice; as, he apprenticed his son to a carpenter.

ap-pren'tice, n. 1. A person, usually a minor, who serves another in order to learn a trade, art, or profession, esp. when bound by indentures for a term of years. The contract between apprentice and master is a relation which can not be assigned at common law, but in Pennsylvania and some other States such assignment is authorized by statute.

The fatherless apprentice lad, who stops
To feast his eyes before the glittering shops.
TROWBRIDGE Book of Gold pt. i, st. 15.

2. Any learner or beginner; as, a mere literary apprentice. 3. U. S. Navy. A boy enlisted to obtain, either on a training-ship or at a training-station, general instruction as well as the science of navigation and gunnery. 4. Old Eng. Law. A barrister of less than 16 years' standing. [< OF. aprentice, < apprendre, learn, < L. apprendo, contr. of apprehendo; see APPREHEND.] — hospital apprentice [U. S. Navy], an enlisted man of the United States hospital corps, eligible to promotion to hospital steward and thence to pharmacist.— parish or town a., a pauper child bound out to service by guardians or overseers of the poor.

ap-pres'sor, 1 a-pres'ər or -er; 2 a-prĕs'or, n. Bot. The excrescence at the tip of the mycelium of certain parasitic fungi, by means of which they fasten on to the host. ap"pres-so'ri-um†.

ap"prē"teur', 1 a"prē'tūr'; 2 ă"prę'tūr', n. [F.] A rubbing-implement used in dressing skins to give a gloss.

ap-prize', } 1 a-praiz'; 2 ă-prīş', vt. [AP-PRIZED'; AP-ap-prise', } PRIZ'ING.] 1. To notify, by way of warning or information; as, apprize him of my safe arrival.

The wrath of the monarch, when apprised of this catastrophe, burst all bounds. GROTE Greece vol. v, pt. ii, p. 16. [M. 1854.]

2. Scots Law. To take possession of the estates of a debtor in payment of debt: superseded by adjudications in 1672. [< F. appris, pp. of apprendre; see APPRENTICE.]

Syn.: acquaint, advertise, advise, communicate, inform, notify, tell, warn. See INFORM.— Ant.: conceal, deny, hoodwink, keep in ignorance, mislead, mystify, reserve, withhold.— Prep.: apprize him of his peril.

ap-prize', } vt. [AP-PRIZED'; AP-PRIZ'ING.] To appraise.
ap-prise', } [< OF. apriser, < LL. appretio; see APPRAISE.] — ap-pri'zal or -sal, n.— ap-prize'[or -prise']-ment, n.— ap-priz'er or -pris'er, n.

ap-prize't, n. Learning; information. ap-prise't.

ap-proach', 1 a-prōch'; 2 ă-prōch', v. I. t. 1. To come near or nearer to, as in place, time, degree, or quality; as, the hour approaches noon.

The nearer humanity approaches a perfect standard, the less does it command our sympathy. ROBERTSON Sermons p. 59. [H. 1870.]

2. To draw near to for the purpose of treating or having relations with; come formally or with settled intent into the presence of; as, the king was easily approached; one of the jurors was approached with bribes.

There are men—a few men—of such capacity that they seem to approach almost all subjects with equal ease.
ALBERT BARNES Evidences of Christianity p. 21. [H. 1868.]

3. Mil. To make approaches to. 4. [Archaic.] To cause to come near or nearer; bring up; as, he approaches his chair to mine.

II. i. To come or be near or nearer in space, time, quality, etc.; advance; draw near; as, the moment approaches; it approaches to excellence.

Perfection of Practice . . . is always approaching, never arrived.
CARLYLE Essays, Characteristics in vol. iii, p. 43. [H. M. & co.]

[< F. approcher, < LL. appropio, < L. ad, to, + propius, compar. of prope, near.] ap-proche'†. Syn.: see ADDRESS, v.; ABUT.— Prep.: to; rare, and only with intransitive sense. —ap-proach'er, n.— ap-proach'ing, n. Hort. A grafting by inarching.— ap-proach'ment, n. [Archaic.] The act of approaching; approach.

ap-proach', n. 1. The act of approaching; a coming nearer; as, I saw his swift approach. 2. A condition of nearness, as with regard to fact or completion; approximation; as, an approach to accuracy. 3. Opportunity to come to or near a person; a coming near; access; as, some great men are difficult of approach.

Without faith there is no real approach to God.
Century Magazine Mar., 1890, p. 784.

4. Means or way of approaching; as, an approach to a bridge. 5. pl. Advances; efforts to make acquaintance or the like; as, I repelled his approaches. 6. Hort. Same as INARCHING. 7. pl. Mil. Constructed works, parallels, trenches, etc., by which the besiegers approach a fortified place. 8. Golf. The stroke, made after the tee-shot, which lands the player's ball on the putting-green.

SYN.: see ACCESS; APPROXIMATION.— Prep.: the approach of the traveler to the village; the approach or approaches of the bridge (when thought of as pertaining to the structure); to the bridge (when thought of as the means of access); the approach by road or by rail; approach of one who seeks favor to or toward him whose favor is sought.— ap-proach"-shot', n. Golf. Same as APPROACH, n., 8.— ap-proach"a-bil'i-ty, n.— ap-proach'a-bl(e), a. That can be approached; easy of access.— -ness, n.— ap-proach'less, a. Having no approach; unapproachable.

ap'pro-bate, 1 ap'ro-bēt; 2 ăp'ro-bāt, vt. [-BAT'ED; -BAT'ING.] 1. [U. S.; obsolete in England.] To pass with approval; sanction formally; express approbation of; approve; as, to approbate the act. 2. To license; as, to approbate a person to keep an inn. [< L. approbatus, pp. of approbo; see APPROVE[1].] Syn.: see PRAISE. —ap'pro-ba"tor, n. [Rare.] One who gives approval officially.— ap'pro-ba-to-ry, a. Pertaining to or containing approbation.— to approbate and reprobate (Scots Law), to take advantage of part of an instrument and reject the rest—a course not permitted in Scottish or English law.

ap"pro-ba'tion, 1 ap'ro-bē'shon; 2 ăp'ro-bā'shon, n. 1. The act of formally or authoritatively approving as proper or commendable, or as good or true; sanction; the act of feeling pleased or satisfied or of expressing oneself as pleased or satisfied with anything; as, the approbation of conscience; royal approbation.

That which evokes moral approbation is not virtue in the abstract.
McCOSH Emotions bk. i, ch. 2, p. 47. [S. 1880.]

2. R. C. Ch. The bishop's official approval of a priest as confessor. 3. [Eng.] Formerly, official sanction of a book by the censor. 4. Ethics. Appreciation of conduct as morally good; the favorable pronouncement of moral consciousness. 5†. Proof; probation.

SYN: acceptance, approval, assent, commendation, concurrence, confirmation, consent, encouragement, praise. Praise is always uttered; approbation may be silent. "Approbation speaks of the thing or action. . . . Praise is always personal." A. W. AND J. C. HARE Guesses at Truth first series, p. 549. [MACM. 1866.] Acceptance refers to an object or action; approbation may refer to character or natural traits. Approval always supposes a testing or careful examination, and frequently implies official sanction; approbation may be upon a general view. The industry and intelligence of a clerk win his employer's approbation; his decision in a special instance receives his approval.— Ant.: blame, censure, condemnation, disapproval, disavowal, dissatisfaction, repudiation.— Prep.: of.

ap'pro-ba"tive, } 1 ap'ro-bē"tiv; 2 ăp'ro-bā'tiv, a. Exap'pro-ba"tivs, } pressing or implying approbation, or the love of it.

ap'pro-ba"tiv(e-ness[s], 1 ap'ro-bē"tiv-nes; 2 ăp'ro-bā"tiv-nĕs, n. The quality of being approbative; specif. in phrenology, the faculty that is the seat of the desire for praise or fame.

Vanity has its origin in approbativeness.
W. C. BROWNELL French Traits essay i, p. 23 [S. 1889.]

ap'pro-ba"to-ry, 1 ap'ro-bē"to-ri; 2 ăp'ro-bā"to-ry, a. Of the nature of or expressing approbation; giving sanction.

ap-proof', 1 a-prūf'; 2 ă-prōōf', n. [Archaic.] 1. The act of testing. 2. Approval. [< OF. aprove, < aprover; see APPROVE[1].]

ap"pro-pin'quate, 1 ap'ro-pin'kwēt; 2 ăp'ro-pin'kwāt, vt. & ri. 1. [Archaic.] To approach; draw near. 2†. To bring near. [< L. appropinquatus, pp. of appropinquo, < ad, to, + propinquo; see PROPINQUATE.] ap"pro-pinque'†.— ap"pro-pin-qua'tion, n. Approach. — ap"pro-pin'quity, n. [Rare.] Nearness.

ap-pro'pre†, vt. To appropriate; assign.

ap-pro'pri-a-ble, } 1 a-prō'pri-ə-bl; 2 ă-prō'pri-a-bl, a.
ap-pro'pri-a-bl[e], } That may be appropriated.

ap-pro'pri-a-ment†, n. That which is peculiar to one; a characteristic.

ap-pro'pri-ate, 1 a-prō'pri-ēt; 2 ă-prō'pri-āt, vt. [-AT"ED; -AT'ING.] 1. To set apart formally or officially, as by legislative act, for a particular purpose; as, Congress appropriates money.

The whole was appropriated to the support of his widow.
MACAULAY Essays, Samuel Johnson p. 46. [F. & W. 1884.]

2. To take for one's own use; avail oneself of; treat as one's own exclusively; hence, to use or put to use generally; as, the surplus was quickly appropriated.

Wherever I find truth, I will appropriate it.
H. W. BEECHER in Life Thoughts p. 144. [F. S. & co. 1858.]

3. Eccl. To annex to a church corporation, as a benefice. Compare IMPROPRIATE. 4. [Archaic.] To select as suitable; render suitable. [< LL. appropriatus, pp. of appropio, < L. ad, to, + proprius, one's own.] Syn.: see ABSTRACT; APPORTION; ASSUME.— Prep.: appropriate to a person; to oneself; for (or to) a purpose.

ap-pro'pri-ate, 1 a-prō'pri-ıt; 2 ă-prō'pri-at, a. 1. Suitable for the purpose and circumstances; befitting the place or occasion; as, appropriate manners; appropriate studies. 2. Appropriated. [< LL. appropriatus; see APPROPRIATE, v.] ap-pro'pri-at"ed†.

Syn.: adapted, apt, becoming, befitting, congruous, fit, meet, proper, suitable, suited, well-suited. See APT; BECOMING; PARTICULAR.— Ant.: ill-adapted, improper, inappropriate, incongruous, unfit, unmeet, unsuitable, unsuited, unworthy.— Prep.: appropriate to the occasion; for the person. ap-pro'pri-ate†, n. A characteristic; property.— ap-pro'pri-ate-ly, adv. 1. Fittingly; suitably. 2†. Peculiarly.— ap-pro'pri-ate-ness, n.

ap-pro'pri-a"tion, 1 a-prō'pri-ē'shon; 2 ă-prō'pri-ā'shon, n. 1. Anything, especially money, set apart formally or officially for a special use or purpose; also, the act of appropriating or setting apart; as, an appropriation for schools; the appropriation of funds. 2. (1) The act of taking or using as one's own; as, appropriation of the best land. (2) The act of annexing as one's own by the intellect or brain; as, an appropriation of a thought, or of a plan. 3. Law. (1) The annexing of a benefice to the perpetual use of a spiritual corporation. (2) The application of the property of a debtor to one of several debts.

ap-pro"pri-a'tion-ist, n. An advocate of appropriation; in Hindu philosophy, one who believes that the soul is an appropriation or adaptation of the being of Brahma. [M.] ap-pro'pri-a-tive, } 1 a-prō'pri-ə-tiv; 2 ă-prō'pri-a-tiv, ap-pro'pri-a-tiv, } a. Tending to, capable of, or making appropriation; as, an appropriative act of Congress.— ap-pro'pri-a-tiv(e-ness[s], n.

ap-pro'pri-a"tor, 1 a-prō'pri-ē'tor or -tor; 2 ă-prō'pri-ā'tor, n. 1. One who appropriates, as to his own use. 2. A spiritual corporation to which the use of a benefice was perpetually annexed.

ap-prov'a-ble, } 1 a-prūv'ə-bl; 2 ă-prov'a-bl, a. That ap-prov'a-bl[e], } may be approved; deserving approval. — ap-prov'a-bl(e-ness[s], n.

ap-prov'al, 1 a-prūv'əl; 2 ă-prov'al, n. The act of approving, in any sense; especially, the regarding or reception of a thing with favor or commendation, or the sending forth of something with the stamp of sanction or approbation; sanction; commendation.

Every right-minded man will be afraid to lose the approval of his conscience.
McCOSH Motive Powers ch. 5, p. 219. [S. 1887.]

SYN.: see ACCLAMATION; APPROBATION; PRAISE.— Prep.: of. — on approval (Com.), delivered subject to the approval of the receiver: said of goods forwarded on condition that if acceptable a sale is effected and if refused they may be returned. Often contracted to on appro.

ap-prov'ance, n. [Archaic.] Approval.

ap-prove'[1], 1 a-prūv'; 2 ă-prov', v. [AP-PROVED', AP-PROV'ING.] I. t. 1. To regard or comment upon as worthy of acceptance, commendation, or favorable attention; form or express a favorable judgment concerning; treat, receive, or present with favor: sometimes followed by of; as, to approve or approve of the policy.

Approve the best and follow what I approve.
MILTON P. L. bk. viii, l. 611.

The people heard it, and approved the doctrine, and immediately practised the contrary. B. FRANKLIN Essays p. 245. [L.]

2. (1) To pronounce good, proper, or legal; give sanction to, as by official act; ratify; confirm; as, the finding of the court martial was approved.

It is approved—look, here is the mark of the rabbis.
LEW WALLACE Ben-Hur bk. ii, ch. 6, p. 118. [H.]

(2) R. C. Ch. To confer jurisdiction on, as a confessor. See APPROBATION, 2. 3. To show by giving proof; evince, make clear, or demonstrate; prove; as, to approve oneself a man of courage. 4. To show to be worthy of approval, confidence, or commendation: used reflexively; as, the idea approves itself to me. 5. To put to the test; test. 6. [Archaic.] To prove; make good.

II. i. 1. To think with favor: often with of. 2†. To turn out; prove. [< OF. aprover, < L. approbo, < ad, to, + probus, good.] Syn.: see ADMIRE; AGREE; ASSENT; JUSTIFY; LIKE; PRAISE; RATIFY.— Prep.: of.— ap-prov'ed-ly, adv. In a manner to be commended.— ap-prov'ed-ness, n. — ap-prov'ing-ly, adv.

ap-prove'[2], vt. Eng. Law. To turn to one's profit, as land by improving it so as to increase its value; appropriate, as waste land for improvement.

The Statute of Merton, in 1235, and the Statute of Westminster, in 1285, mark the growth of the doctrine which converted the overlord's territorial sway into property. Recent legislation on the approving of waste lands and commons is based on a revision of the principles embodied in these statutes. [< OF. approuer, profit, < a (< L. ad), to, + pro, prod, profit, < L. pro, for.]

ap-prove'ment[1], 1 a-prūv'ment or -ment; 2 ă-prov'ment, n. 1. The act of becoming an approver, or of turning state's evidence. See APPROVER[1], 1. 2†. The act of approving; approbation. [< OF. aprovement, < aprover; see APPROVE[1].]

ap-prove'ment[2], n. Old Eng. Law. Improvement and conversion to private use, as of waste lands; also, the profit arising from land so appropriated. [< OF. approuement, < approuer; see APPROVE[2].]

ap-prov'er[1], 1 a-prūv'ər; 2 ă-prov'er, n. 1. One who approves, confirms, sanctions, or commends. 2. Eng. Law. One who confesses a crime and accuses another.

ap-prov'er[2]†, n. Old Eng. Law. One who manages a landed estate; a bailiff; steward. ap-prow'ert.

approx., abbr. Approximately.

ap-prox'i-mal, 1 a-prŏks'ı-məl; 2 ă-prŏks'i-mal, a. Close together: said of the surfaces of teeth. [< AD- + PROXIMAL.]

ap-prox'i-mant, 1 a-prŏks'ı-mənt; 2 ă-prŏks'i-mant, n. [Rare.] Approaching closely; resembling; approximating.

ap-prox'i-mate, 1 a-prŏks'ı-mēt; 2 ă-prŏks'i-māt, v. [-MAT'ED; -MAT'ING.] I. t. 1. To cause to approach or come near, usually in degree or character, but sometimes in physical position; as, to approximate two surfaces.

The only successful reformatories are those . . . which have approximated their régime to the method of Nature.
SPENCER Education p. 177. [A. 1889.]

2. To come close to, as in quality, degree, or quantity; approach closely without coinciding with exactly; as, his income approximates $10,000; to approximate perfection.

II. i. To come very near in value, space, degree, resemblance, etc., without actual coincidence.

Things seem to approximate to God in proportion to their vitality and movement. BULWER-LYTTON Caxtons p. 143. [L. 1882.]

Woman is appreciated only as she approximates to sterner natures. LYDIA H. SIGOURNEY Let. to Young Ladies p. 14. [H. 1837.]

ap-prox'i-mate, 1 a-prŏks'ı-mit; 2 ă-prŏks'i-mat, a. 1. Nearly but not exactly accurate; as, an approximate estimate or result.

There is no practical question on which any thing more than an approximate solution can be had.
EMERSON Rep. Men p. 151. [H. M. & co. 1883.]

2. Near in position, time, or character.

— approximate quantities (Math.), quantities nearly but not exactly equal.— ap-prox'i-mate-ly, adv. Very nearly but not absolutely; also, by approximation.

ap-prox"i-ma'tion, 1 a-prŏks'ı-mē'shon; 2 ă-prŏks'i-mā'shon, n. 1. The act or result of approximating; as the approximation of values, of means to ends, etc.

Printing . . . was the means of an approximation to a systematic and uniform orthography. R. G. WHITE Every-Day English ch. 16, p. 259. [H. M. & co. 1881.]

2. Math. Any process of finding values that are successively nearer and nearer the truth without ever reaching it exactly; also, a result so obtained; as, the answer is an approximation correct to the third decimal place.

SYN.: approach, likeness, nearness, neighborhood, propinquity, resemblance, similarity. In mathematics, approximation is not guesswork, not looseness, and not error. The process of approximation is as exact and correct at every point as that by which an absolute result is secured; the result falls of exactness only because of some inherent difficulty in the problem. The attempt to "square the circle" gives only an approximate result, because of the impossibility of expressing the circumference in terms of the radius. But the limits of error on either side are known, and the approximation has practical value. Outside of mathematics, the correct use of approximation (and the kindred words approximate and approximately) is to express as near an approach to accuracy and certainty as the conditions of human thought or action in any given case make possible. Resemblance and similarity may be but superficial and apparent; approximation is real. Approach is a relative term, indicating that one has come nearer than before, the the distance may yet be considerable; an approximation brings one really near without absolutely touching or reaching. Nearness, neighborhood, and propinquity are commonly used of place; approximation, of mathematical calculations and abstract reasoning; we speak of approach to the shore, nearness to the town, approximation to the truth.— Ant.: difference, distance, error, remoteness, unlikeness, variation.— Prep.: the approximation of the vegetable to the animal type.

ap-prox'i-ma-tive, } 1 a-prŏks'ı-mə-tiv; 2 ă-prŏks'i-maap-prox'i-ma-tiv[e], } tiv, a. Of, pertaining to, using, or obtained by approximation; approximate; as, approximative estimates.— -ly, adv.— -ness, n.

ap"pui', 1 a'pwē'; 2 ă'pwī', vt. [Rare.] 1. Mil. To post, as troops, at a point of support. 2. To prop; sustain. ap"puy'†.

ap"pui', n. [F.] 1. Manège. The bearing of the bridle-hand or of the horse's mouth upon the bridle-rein, or of either upon the other. 2. Mil. Support. 3†. Support; stay; prop. ap"puy'‡. — point d'ap"pui', 1 pwăn da'pwī'; 2 pwăn dă'pwī' [F.], a point of application; basis; hence, any point suited to furnish shelter or support.

ap'pulse, 1 ap'ŭls or a-puls'; 2 ăp'ŭls or ă-pŭls' (XIII), n. 1. Astron. The approach of one heavenly body toward another or toward the meridian. 2. An approach or impact of one moving body toward or upon another: said especially of a ship.

In our experience, the rays or appulses have sufficient force to arrive at the senses, but not enough to reach the quick.
EMERSON Essays, Poet in second series, p. 13. [H. M. & co. 1890.]

ap-pul'sion, 1 a-pul'shən; 2 ă-pŭl'shon, n. 1. The act of striking against. 2. Same as AVULSION, 3.

ap-pur'te-nance, 1 a-pūr'tı-nans; 2 ă-pûr'te-nanç, n. 1. Any minor thing as belonging or attached to a principal one, esp. as serving some useful purpose; an accessory or adjunct; as, the appurtenances of one's trade.

Environed with all manner of complex dignified appurtenances.
CARLYLE Heroes and Hero-Worship lect. v, p. 152. [L. co.]

2. Law. Something annexed to some other thing that is its principal, as a right of way. As used in law, appurtenance commonly signifies an incorporeal hereditament annexed to lands or to houses, and needful for the enjoyment thereof. As used in the United States Supreme Court rules in admiralty, besides a ship's tackle, sails, etc., appurtenances include other articles furnished for the voyage, tho not necessary to the vessel's navigation.

3. The act or state of appertaining or belonging. [< OF. apertenance, < LL. appertinentia, < appertineo; see APPERTAIN.] ap-per'te-nauncet. SYN.: see ADJUNCT; APPENDAGE.

ap-pur'te-nant, 1 a-pūr'tı-nant; 2 ă-pûr'te-nant, a. 1. Appertaining or belonging, as to something else more important; subsidiary; accessory; annexed; incident.

A massive trough of water, apparently for the common use, declared this court appurtenant to the domestic management of the owner. LEW WALLACE Ben-Hur bk. ii, ch. 3, p. 96. [H.]

2. Belonging (to) as a legal right or property; appertaining (to) as if by right; appropriate to; pertinent. [< OF. apertenant, < LL. appertinen(t-)s, ppr. of appertineo; see APPERTAIN.] a-per'te-naunt†.

ap-pur'te-nant, n. An appurtenance.

Apr., abbr. April.

a-prax'i-a, 1 ə-praks'ı-ə; 2 ă-präks'i-a, n. Pathol. Inability to use or to understand the uses of things, due to cerebral disorder. [< Gr. aprazia, < a- priv. + prassō, do.]

A-prax'in, 1 ə-praks'ın; 2 ă-präks'ın. Feodor Matvayerich (1671–11/21 1728). A Russian admiral who conquered Finland and created the Russian navy under Peter the Great.

A. P. E. C., abbr. See ABBREVIATION.

A"pre"mont, 1 a'pra'mōn'; 2 ă'pre'mōn', n. 1. A village in the Argonne Forest region, Ardennes department, France. 2. A village in Meuse department, France. Scenes of severe German defeats 1914–1918.

Apricot, showing flower and fruit.

ap'ri-cate, 1 ap'ri-kēt; 2 ăp'ri-cāt, v. [Archaic.] I. t. To expose to sunlight. II. i. To bask in the sun. [< L. apricatus, pp. of apricor, < aperto, uncover.]

a-prick', a. Pricking or spurring.

A'prīl, 1 ē'prəl; 2 ā'pril, n. 1. The fourth month in the English calendar year. See CALENDAR. 2. Any opening and hopeful period, as of life; also, a period or state of emotional inconstancy: from the frequent alternation of showers and sunshine in April.

And hopes and light regrets that come Make April of her tender eyes.
TENNYSON In Memoriam xxxix, st. 2.

[< F. Avril, < L. Aprilis, < aperio, open; see APERIENT.] Ap-prīl'let.— April fool. 1. The subject of a practical joke on April 1 (All Fools' day). 2. [Local, U. S.] The pasqueflower, which generally blossoms about Easter.— A. gentlemant, a bridegroom.— A"prīl-esque', a. Like April.

a prī'ma vis'ta, 1 ū prī'mə vis'tə; 2 ā prī'mä vis'tä. [It.] Mus. At first sight.

a prī-o'rī, 1 ē prai-ō'rai; 2 ā prī-ō'rī. [L.; literally, from what is before.] 1. Logic. Proceeding, as an argument or inference, from antecedent to consequent, from cause to effect, or from any assumption to its logical consequences; of or pertaining to such reasoning; deductive: as an adverb, deductively: opposed to a posteriori.

From the time of Aristotle to that of David Hume and Kant, to argue 'a priori,' meant to proceed from cause to effect, or from reason to consequent. . . . Since the rise of the Kantian philosophy, by the 'a priori' method is meant proceeding from principles imbedded in the mind and independent of experience.
McCOSH Logic p. 74. [C. & BROS. 1871.]

2. Philos. Prior to, in the sense of being independent of, experience and yet furnishing the basis of experience; innate; also, based upon innate ideas or postulates furnished by them.

The A Priori has a three-fold significance. It embraces (1) the formal laws of mind, of which logic furnishes the best example; (2) the Ideas generated by the mind; and (3) the contents of the absolute mind. Encyc. Religion and Ethics, vol. i, p. 652. [s. '08.]

3. Previous to, or with insufficient, examination; in accordance with one's previous notions or prepossessions; presumptively; as, a priori theories of inspiration; to conclude a priori where one is ignorant of the facts.

We are told that miracles are impossible. This is an a priori assumption. . . . It is an unproved dogma turned against facts.
SCHAFF Person of Christ, False Theories p. 99. [s. 1881.]

— a"prī-o'rī-ly, adv. By a priori reasoning.— a"prī-o'rism, n. 1. A priori reasoning. 2. A principle assumed to be a priori: said contemptuously.— a"prī-o'rist, n. One who believes in a priori or intuitive cognition.— a"prī-o-ris'tic, a. [Rare.] — a"prī-or'ī-ty, *n. Ap"suat', 1 ăp'-wät'; 2 ăp'-wät', n. An Egyptian god, having, like Anubis, the head of a jackal, and sharing with him the guardianship of the dead.

Formerly, Anubis and Apuat were considered to be two names of one and the same god, but there is no longer any reason for holding this view. . . . The function of each god was to 'open the ways' and therefore each might be called Apuat, but, strictly speaking, Anubis was the opener of the roads of the North, and Apuat was the opener of the roads of the South; in fact Anubis was the personification of the Summer solstice, and Apuat of the Winter solstice. E. A. W. BUDGE The Gods of the Egyptians vol. ii. pp. 263-264. [METH. '04.]

The decision of the arbiter or arbitrator on the agreement submitted to arbitration (the submission) is known as the award. The law governing arbitration is subject to statutory regulations, and consequently varies in the different States of the United States. In the United States there is no provision for individual disputes; but the federal government and 24 of the States have provided for collective disputes. The federal law of 1898, still in force, provides for: (1) Mediation by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Commissioner of Labor upon request of either party: (2) voluntary arbitration by a board whose awards are enforceable by law. The various State laws provide: (1) for voluntary arbitration; (2) through the agency of a temporary board, and (3) such board has power to compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of evidence. In addition they provide for (1) permanent district or county boards established by private parties; (2) permanent tribunals established jointly by employers and employees; (3) the licensing of such tribunals by local civil courts with power to compel the presence of witnesses and the production of evidence; (4) provision only for voluntary arbitration by such tribunals. In Great Britain by the act of 1896 mediation in such disputes is provided for by the British Board of Trade. Encyc. of Social Reform. [F. & W. co. '08.] See under BOARD, n. In regard to disputes among private individuals, the Arbitration Act of 1889 provides that they may be referred to arbitration either (1) as a reference by consent out of court, or (2) as a reference by order of the court. The award made by the arbitrators or umpire shall be final and binding. In international disputes the conditions are regulated by treaty. See ARBITRATOR and HAGUE TRIBUNAL, under HAGUE.

arc, 1 ärk; 2 ärc, vi. [ARCHED or ARCED; ARCH'ING or ARC'ING.] Elec. To form a voltaic arc, or allow one to be formed, as at the brushes of a dynamo-electric machine.

arc, n. 1. Anything in the shape of an arch, of a curve, or of a part of a circle; a bow; an arch.
The pale arcs of the Northern lights. WHITTIER Among the H. st. 82.
2. Math. (1) A part of any algebraic curve, esp. of a circle. (2) Loosely, an angle. 3. Astron. A part of the apparent path of a heavenly body. 4. Arch. An arch: used chiefly in phrases from the French.
Statues, and trophies, and triumphal arcs. MILTON P. R. bk. iv, l. 37.
5. The voltaic arc. [F., < L. arcus, bow.]— arc cosecant, cosine, cotangent, secant, sine, tangent, etc., the arc or angle corresponding to a given cosecant, cosine, etc. —arc'-lamp", n. An electric lamp. See illus. under LAMP.— arc-light, n. Electric light. See under ELECTRIC. —arc of approach (Mech.), that part of the arc of contact of wheels in reciprocal gear which commences with the first contact of a pair of teeth and ends at the pitch-point.— arc of contact (Mech.), the arc corresponding to the combined angles of approach and recess, the length of which is determined by the diameter of the generating circle. arc of action‡.— arc of progression (Astron.), the arc described by a planet moving in its orbit from west to east. arc of direction‡.— arc of recess (Mech.), that part of the arc of contact of wheels in reciprocal gear commencing with the coincidence of the pitch-points of a pair of teeth and ending with the cessation of contact.— arc of retrogradation (Astron.), the arc described by a planet apparently moving from east to west.— arc-pitch, n. Mech. The distance between centers of any two adjoining gear-teeth measured along the pitch-circle.— arcs of parallel, those portions of a given parallel of latitude whose astronomical and geodetical measurements are taken so as to determine the length of a degree of longitude in that latitude. The dimensions of the earth are determined by the data obtained from the observation of these arcs.— Brocard arcs, six arcs, each of which has for its extremities two angles of a triangle and passes through one of the two Brocard points of the triangle. —contact-arc, n. Meteorol. A luminous arc tangent to one of the heliocentric circles of a solar or lunar halo. The upper contact-arc of the halo of 46° radius is often very brilliant and is sometimes called the circumzenithal arc. Contact-arcs are also known as contact-arches and tangent arcs. —electric arc, the passage of an electric current across the air-gap between two conductors or terminals, accompanied by intense heat and a vivid flame. When occurring between carbon electrodes it is known as the voltaic arc, and when between metallic conductors as the metallic arc. Compare VOLTAIC ARC.— elevating-arc, n. An arc-like graduated scale at the breech of a gun to regulate elevation.— flaming arc, a voltaic arc which volatilizes the salts of certain metals as barium, calcium, potassium, titanium, and cerium, producing an intense light.— multiple arc, a multiple circuit. See MULTIPLE.— nocturnal arc (Astron.), the arc described by the sun or other heavenly body from setting to rising.— reflex arcs (Physiol.), the nervous tracts along which impulses run independent of voluntary control; viz., an afferent nerve, a nerve-center, and an efferent nerve.— voltaic arc (Elec.), a bow of intensely hot and luminous flame between two electrodes connected with a powerful generator of electricity: the source of light in an arc-lamp. Compare ELECTRIC LIGHT.— wing-arc, n. Aero. The arc of movement of reciprocating wing-surfaces of an ornithopter or other flying-machine that sustains itself in the air by flapping wing-strokes.

Arc, Jeanne d'. Same as JOAN OF ARC.

Spans with bright arch the glittering hills below.
CAMPBELL Pleasures of Hope pt. i, st. 1.

1. Round arch. 2. Segmental arch. 3. Elliptical arch. 4. Equilateral pointed arch, with trefoil arches above. 5. Arch of discharge. 6. Rampant arch. 7. Extrados (ex) and intrados (in) of an arch. a, a, abutments; c, crown; i, i, imposts; k, key-stone; l, l, lines of stress; p, p, piers; s, s, springers; sp, spandrel; t, trefoils; v, voussoir.

2. Arch. Any structure supported at the sides or ends only, and formed of distinct pieces no one of which spans the opening, serving to carry downward pressure and transform it into lateral thrust; esp., a masonry structure of comparatively small blocks so assembled as to support one another by mutual pressure. A pure arch is of precisely similar blocks, with inner and outer curves concentric and free from projections; within certain limits it is elastic, and will adjust itself without straining to inequalities of pressure. The arch is often named from its intrados outline or from the number of its curves, as catenary, cinquefoil, cycloidal, elliptical, horseshoe, multifoil, semicircular, triangular, trefoil.

3. An arched passageway; archway.

And through the dark arch a charger sprang.
LOWELL Vision of Sir Launfal pt. i, st. 3.

4. The height within the curve of an arched body, as from the centers of the scrolls to the main leaf of an elliptic spring. 5. Mining. An unworked part of a vein or lode. 6. A fire-chamber; also, the door of an ash-pit. 7. [Archaic.] An arc. 8. Aero. The curve of a surface from front to rear; also, a curved wing-tip. 9. Ship-building. A bridge-piece. 10. The concavity of the hard palate. [< F. arche, for arc, < L. arcus, bow.]— arch'-band", n. That portion of a rib visible below the surface of vaulting.—a.-bar, n. A bar deriving stiffness from cambering or arch form.—a.-board, n. A plank sprung athwart a ship's stern, bearing her name and port of hail.—a.-brick, n. 1. A partly vitrified brick, from the arches of a kiln. 2. pl. All bricks set in the arches, or benches, and discolored, twisted, or broken.—a.-buttress, n. A flying buttress.—a.-stone, n. 1. A stone to close an opening, as in a furnace chamber. 2. A voussoir. a.-solid‡.— basket-handle a., a low-crowned three-centered arch.— bell-a., n. An arch composed of a semicircle resting on two convex quadrants or quarter-round corbels.— camber-a., n. A flat arch with slightly concave intrados. — compound a., an arch having an archivolt receding in steps so as to appear like a succession of receding arches.— diminished a., same as IMPERFECT ARCH.— flat a., a lintel formed of stones or bricks that support each other without rising in a curve.— flood a., an arch of a bridge designed to provide an escape for flood-water.— floor-a., n. A continuous arch between metal floor-beams: usually a flat arch of hollow bricks.— four-centered a., an arch with outline formed of four curves symmetrically placed and each with its own center.— French a. (Masonry), an arch in which bricks are placed so as to slope from each side and meet at an angle at the apex: contrasted with flat arch.— geostatic a., a linear arch of such curve that the vertical pressure at any point is proportionate to the rise at that point, and the horizontal pressure bears a fixed ratio to the vertical.— hanse-a., n. An arch having the upper part curved to a longer radius than that of the haunches; a basket-handle (flattened semielliptical or three-centered) arch: rarely fair-centered. haunch a.‡; haunched a.‡. — horseshoe a., an arch whose curve resembles a horseshoe or describes more than half of a circle.— hydrostatic a., a linear arch capable of sustaining a pressure (like that of a liquid) proportional to the depth below a certain horizontal plane.— imperfect a., an arch of circular curve, less than a semicircle.— inflected a. (Arch.), an arch with the curve of its flanks reversed near the crown, terminating in an acute angle; an inverted arch.— laminated a., an arch of bent wooden planks fastened by trenails; an arched compound beam.— lancet a., a narrow, very sharply pointed arch.— memorial a., same as TRIUMPHAL ARCH, 2.— mixed a., a three- or four-centered elliptic or Tudor arch.— oblique a., a skew arch.— ogee a., an arch the outline of each side of which is an ogee.— rampant a., an arch having one abutment higher than the other.— rear a., the inner arch of a window or doorway.— recessed a., a compound arch.— rising a., a rampant arch.— scheme or skene a., same as IMPERFECT ARCH.— segmental a., an arch of circular curve, and less than 180° of arc.— skew a., or skewed a., an arch whose axis is in a vertical plane making other than right angles with its abutments.— straight a., an arch having a level intrados.— three-centered a., an arch the outline of which is composed of three symmetrically placed curves each with its own center.— trimmer-a., a nearly flat arch supporting a hearth, commonly of brick and extending from the chimney-breast to a trimmer-beam.— triumphal a. 1. An arched structure of monumental proportions erected to commemorate the triumph of a Roman or other general. The most celebrated among Roman arches are: (1) The arch of Constantine, over the Via Triumphalis near the Colosseum; (2) the arch of Titus on the Via Sacra; (3) the arch of Septimius Severus in the Forum, all of these at Rome; (4) the arch of Trajan at Benevento. Other fine examples still remain at Rimini, Susa, Verona, and Ancona. Among other memorial arches the most noteworthy are: (1) The Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile, at the head of the Champs Elysées, Paris, having its inception with the Emperor Napoleon I., in 1806, but not brought to completion until thirty years later; and (2) the Arc de Triomphe du Carrousel, in the Tuileries gardens, also the work of Napoleon I., commemorating his victories in the campaign of 1805–1806; (3) the Brandenburger Tor at the beginning of Unter den Linden in Berlin, erected by Frederick William II. in 1793. The celebrated quadriga surmounting it was carried off by Napoleon in 1807 but was restored in 1814. 2. An arched structure to commemorate a joyful event or a noted person, of which the two best-known examples are: (1) The Marble Arch, outside Hyde Park, London, originally intended as a memorial to Lord Nelson, erected in front of Buckingham Palace but removed to Hyde Park in 1851; (2) the Washington Arch at the beginning of Fifth Avenue, New York, erected by public subscription and completed in 1892. See plate at ARCHITECTURE, fig. 16.— Tudor a., same as MIXED ARCH.

arch"bish'op, 1 ärch'bish'ąp: 2 ärch'bĭsh'op, n. The chief of the bishops of an ecclesiastical province in the Greek, Roman, and Anglican churches.

In the Anglican and Roman Catholic churches the jurisdiction of an archbishop over his suffragans is in practise almost purely honorary, but in the latter church he has certain well-defined rights in canon law. The archbishops of the Greek Church are almost invariably titular and without suffragans. The Episcopalians of the United States and Scotland have no archbishops. A titular archbishop in the Roman Catholic Church is one invested with the title of an extinct Eastern see, and having no jurisdiction; retired bishops are often promoted to this rank.

The archbishop Is the king's hand and tongue.
SHAKESPEARE King Henry VIII. act v, sc. 1.

arch"dea'con, 1 ärch'dē'kn; 2 ärch'dē'en, n. Ch. Hist. Originally, the chief deacon in the Metropolitan Church: now used in the Roman Catholic and Anglican churches to designate a high official administrator of the affairs of a diocese. arche"di'a-cre†. In the Church of England the archdeacon is an ordinary, having part of the episcopal power. He visits his jurisdiction once a year, and holds a court, his judicial acts being subject to appeal to the bishop. The office has recently been introduced, with modified functions, in some dioceses of the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States. In the Roman Catholic Church the archidiaconal office declined after the Council of Trent, and in many dioceses disappeared altogether, the functions being ordinarily discharged by the vicar-general.

At Rome the archdeacon developed into the cardinal-camerlingo and the cathedral-archpriest into the cardinal-vicar, while in the other dioceses their place has been frequently taken by co-adjutor or assistant bishops.
New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. vol. i, p. 260.

ar'got, 1 ûr'go or -got; 2 är'gō or -gŏt, n. [F.] The peculiar phraseology of any class; slang: originally, a jargon used by thieves and rogues. — ar-got'ic, a.

Arg. Rep., abbr. Argentine Republic.

ar'gue, 1 ûr'giū; 2 är'gū, v. [AR'GUED; AR'GU-ING.] I. t. 1. To urge reasons for or against; reason about; as, the counsel argued the case for the plaintiff. 2. To influence by argument or reasoning; as, to argue one out of or into an opinion, purpose, etc. 3. To furnish proof of; render capable of inference; show; evince; imply; as, creation argues a Creator.

Purity forced by self-constraint or maintained by mere prudence argues impurity. BUSHNELL Work and Play p. 16. [S. 1864.]

4†. To accuse; impeach; convict.

II. i. 1. To urge reasons for or against a proposition or measure; present arguments; as, to argue for the right, against injustice.

There is nothing more delusive than arguing from a fellow's school or collegiate successes to his triumphs in after life.
LEVER Luttrell of Arran ch. 3, p. 20. [H. 1865.]

2. To contend in argument, or argumentatively; as, do not argue, but obey. [< F. arguer, < L. arguo, show.]

Syn.: contend, controvert, debate, demonstrate, discuss, dispute, establish, prove, question, reason, wrangle. Persons may contend either from mere ill will or self-interest, or from the highest motives; "that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints," Jude 3. To argue is to make a matter clear by reasoning; to discuss is to shake it apart for examination and analysis. One may argue and discuss without an opponent. To demonstrate is to force the mind to a conclusion by irresistible reasoning; to prove is rather to establish a fact by evidence; as, to prove one innocent or guilty. That which has been either demonstrated or proved so as to secure general acceptance is said to be established. Reason is a neutral word, not necessarily implying contest. We reason about a matter by bringing up all that reason can give us on any side. We may question or discuss a proposition without reference to any one's advocacy of it, but to contend, debate, or dispute implies an opponent. A dispute may be personal, fractious, and petty; a debate is formal and orderly; if otherwise, it becomes a mere wrangle. — Prep.: we argue with a person about a subject, for or against an opinion; we argue a person into or out of a course of action; one argues from a cause to an effect. — ar'gu-a-bl(e), a. — ar'gu-er, n.

Ar-guel'les, 1 ar-gwel'ĕz; 2 är-gwĕl'ĕs, n. A town in Negros, P. I. [DESARGUESIAN.

ar'gu-ment, 1 ûr'giu-ment or -ment; 2 är'gū-ment, n. 1. A reason offered for or against an opinion, statement, measure, or the like; anything tending to convince or produce belief; something offered in proof; a reason; evidence; as, the impulse to pray is an argument for the existence of God.

And in the ruins of the cities that once stood upon its [Sea of Galilee's] shores we have an argument in support of the divine record. F. S. DE HASS Buried Cities Recov. p. 267. [J. W. D. 1882.]

2. The means or process of proof; a connected series of statements or reasons intended to establish a position; course of reasoning; demonstration; as, the whole book is one connected argument. Arguments may be direct, that is, specifically and in terms aimed at a declared conclusion (argumentum ad rem); or indirect, as by disproving the contradictory, etc., as in reductio ad absurdum. For the various forms of indirect argument, as argumentum a fortiori, etc., see ARGUMENTUM. See also SYLLOGISM.

The pupil of impulse, it forced him along,
His conduct still right, with his argument wrong.
GOLDSMITH Retaliation l. 46.

3. Logic. The middle term of a syllogism. 4. A contest in reasoning between advocates of opposing beliefs or measures; debate; discussion; dispute; as, they had a long argument. 5. A summary of the plot or salient points of a literary production; also, more broadly, the subject-matter or gist of an article; as, the argument of a play or novel. 6. Math. (1) The angle which the vector representing an imaginary quantity makes with the initial direction. (2) The number with which a table is entered; the independent variable, values of a function of which are given in a table. 7†. The subject or matter of controversy. Ar"is-to-te'li-an, n. A disciple of Aristotle. See PERIPATETIC and ARISTOTELIANISM.

Ar"is-to-te'li-an-ism, 1 -izm; 2 -ĭsm, n. 1. In general, the doctrines of Aristotle, or philosophy pervaded with the Aristotelian spirit. 2. Specif.: (1) Experimentalism as opposed to intuitionalism. (2) The deductive method as opposed to the inductive. Ar"is-tot'el-ism‡. As respects its fundamental principle Aristotelianism resembled Hegelianism in assuming the possibility of establishing an ideal scheme of development which should harmonize all human experience. While Aristotle received much from his great master Plato, and especially the doctrine of an intelligent, self-active first cause, he differed from the latter in rejecting Plato's expression self-moved, and substituting for it unmoved-mover. In this way he thought to constitute an active principle, independent of the limitations of space, time, and matter, which would explain the world of nature and man. The effects of this philosophy have been important; some of the principal developments of Aristotelianism are as follows: (a) A cosmology, a system of metaphysical evolution, in which power and act are the key-words, entelechy or complete development the final outcome, and material, formal, efficient, and final causes the principles by which the evolution is governed and perfected. See under CAUSE, n. (b) A gnosiology, an experiential scheme in which all knowledge is developed from sense-impressions, and embraced in the ten categories. See under CATEGORY. (c) Logic, in which the syllogism and the deductive method are supreme. (d) Ethics, a form of eudemonism which holds that the supreme good consists in contemplation and action combined, and that virtue is the golden mean between two opposite vices. The principles and methods of Aristotelianism have inspired some of the greatest systems of philosophy, and still remain a vitalizing force in religion and metaphysics.

The philosophy of Aristotle [Aristotelianism] is a strongly pronounced dualism; matter and form, God and the world, are distinct though inseparable existences. . . . God is an act rather than a will, a process and not a person.
New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. vol. i, p. 284. [F. & W. CO. '08.]

Ar'is-tot-le, 1 ar'ıs-tet-l; 2 ăr'is-tŏt-l, n. A Greek philosopher (384–322 B. C.); pupil of Plato; teacher of Alexander the Great. A-ri-sto-te'lēs‡ [Gr.].— Ar"is-to-tel'ic, a.

ar'mor, n. 1. Mil. A defensive covering. Specif.: (1) A coat or suit of mail; the defensive outfit of a warrior, as in ancient and medieval warfare: often named (a) from the material, as leather armor, or (b) from its construction, as chain a., plate a., ribbed a., ring a., scale a. See BARD[2].

Mail armor continued in general use till about the year 1300. BULFINCH Age of Chivalry pt. i, p. 22. [C. N. & CO. 1859.]

The Roman troopers despised the complete armor with which the cavalry of the East was encumbered. GIBBON Rome vol. i, p. 17. [P. S. & CO. 1852.]

(2) Metallic plates, now usually of steel, for ships, forts, etc., to resist modern artillery. Armor was first applied to ships by Robert L. Stevens, of Hoboken, N. J., in 1842. It was first used 4½ inches thick by the French in the Crimean war (1855). The thickness increased to 12 inches by 1872. In 1876 wrought iron was replaced by steel. Steel-faced compound plates were made by the Wilson process and by the Ellis process. The Harvey process was generally adopted in 1891, and this was later superseded by the Krupp process. Krupp armor has about 15 per cent. greater resisting power than Harvey armor, while the latter is equal to double the thickness of wrought iron. Armor for fortifications is largely made by the Gruson process, and consists of heavy blocks of chilled cast iron.

The French were the first to apply in a practical shape the idea (which . . . originated in the United States) of reviving the use of armor, and placing it on the sides of ships.

Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. xvii, p. 284.

2. The whole outfit, offensive and defensive, of one engaged in any conflict: now chiefly used figuratively; as, "put on the whole armor of God." Eph. vi, 17.

[< F. armée, < LL. armata, prop. fem. of L. armatus; see ARMATURE.] ar'méc†.

Syn.: armament, force, forces, host, legions, military, multitude, phalanx, soldiers, soldiery, troops. Host is used for any vast and orderly assemblage; as, the stars are called the heavenly host. Multitude expresses number without order or organization; a multitude of armed men is not an army, but a mob. Legion (from the Latin) and phalanx (from the Greek) are applied by a kind of poetic license to modern forces; the plural legions is preferred to the singular. Military is a general word for land-forces; the military may include all the armed soldiery of a nation, or it may be applied to any small detached company, as at a fort, in distinction from civilians. Any organized body of men by whom the law or will of a people is executed is a force (see FORCE, n., 8). Organization and unity rather than numbers are the essentials of an army. An army may be little, large, or vast.

Syn.: arrange, dispose, draw up, marshal, set in order. See ARRANGE. Compare ARRAY, n.— Ant.: confuse, disarrange, disarray, disorder, throw into confusion.— Prep.: array in order of battle; in the open field; before the commander; against the enemy; array in or with royal apparel.

— ar-ray'al, n. The act or process of arraying; an array. — ar-ray'er, n. 1. One who or that which arrays. 2. Eng. Hist. An officer whose duty it was in medieval times to arm and accouter the troops; a commissioner of array.— ar-ray'ment, n. Arrayal.

ar-ray', n. 1. Regular or proper order; arrangement or disposition, as in lines or ranks, suitable for attack or defense or for display; a state of special preparation; as, an army in battle array.

Do not set fear in array against truth, in the breast of your child. LYDIA H. SIGOURNEY Letters to Mothers p. 38. [H. 1842.]

Behold, in close array, What mighty banners stream.
ROGERS Voyage of Columbus can. 3, st. 1.

2. The collective body of persons or things thus arrayed; hence, a military or militia force.

How easy it is to confirm preconceived judgments by an array of partial facts.
J. L. NEVIUS China and the Chinese p. 287. [H. 1869.]

3. An orderly arrangement, as of brilliant or impressive objects; as, an array of gems. 4. Clothing for the body, esp. ornamental clothing; raiment; attire; apparel. 5. Math. A collection of quantities arranged in rectangular form: a matrix. 6. Law. All the persons composing a jury or panel, or the act of arraying them. 7. Statistics. The group of values of a variable correlated with any one value of another variable. 8. Eng. Hist. A men mustering, as of the militia of a county, or the men mustered. 9. Biol. Biometr. The expression of a frequency distribution with respect to any measured character. In determining the coefficient of correlation a table is made up of squares arranged in horizontal and vertical columns. If the horizontal columns show differing lengths and the vertical differing weights, then any column shows the distribution of a class of the measured population having a given value of one character in terms of the other. 10†. A state of affairs; plight. [< F. arroi, < OF. areyer; see ARRAY, v.]

Syn.: arrangement, battle array, collection, disposition, exhibition, line of battle, order, order of battle, parade, show, sight. The phrase battle array or array of battle is archaic and poetic; we now say in line or order of battle. The parade is for exhibition and oversight, and partial rehearsal of military manual and maneuvers. Array refers to a continuous arrangement of men, so that all may be seen or reviewed at once. This is practically impossible with the vast armies of our day. We say rather the disposition of troops, which expresses their location so as to sustain and support, tho unable to see or readily communicate with each other. See DRESS.— to challenge the array, to take exception to the whole panel of jurymen. See CHALLENGE.

E. P. WHIPPLE Character, Intellectual p. 85. [T. & F. 1866.]

2. Law. To take into legal custody; seize and hold by legal authority; apprehend; as, to arrest a thief, or a ship (under admiralty process): not now used of property except in Scots and admiralty law.

At the instigation of Herodias John was at once arrested.
F. S. DE HASS Buried Cities pt. iii, p. 24. [I. W. D. 1882.]

3. To attract and fix, as the attention; engage the attention of; seize upon.

They [great men] still arrest the attention.
SMILES Character ch. 1, p. 33. [H. 1872.]

Great thoughts . . . Seize upon the mind — arrest, and search,
And shake it. BAILEY Festus, Village Feast sc. 9.

4. Figuratively, to hold as security.

Twenty pounds of money, which must be paid. . . . His horses are arrested for it. SHAKESPEARE Merry Wives act v, sc. 5.

5†. To rest; fix. 6†. To wrest.

II. i. To stop; stay; rest. [< OF. arester, < LL. arresto, < L. ad, to, + resto; see REST, v.] a-reste'†.

SYN.: apprehend, capture, catch, detain, hold, make prisoner, restrain, secure, seize, stop, take into custody, take prisoner. The legal term arrest carries always the implication of a legal offense; this is true even of arresting for debt. But one may be detained by process of law when no offense is alleged against him, as in the case of a witness who is held in a house of detention till a case comes to trial. One may be restrained of his liberty without arrest, as in an insane asylum; an individual or corporation may be restrained by injunction from selling certain property. In case of an arrest, an officer may secure his prisoner by fetters, by a locked door, or other means effectually to prevent escape. Capture is commonly used of seizure by armed force; as, to capture a ship, a fort, etc. See OBSTRUCT. — ANT.: discharge, dismiss, free, liberate, release. — PREP.: arrested for crime, on suspicion, by the sheriff; on, upon, or by virtue of a warrant; on final process; in execution. — ar-rest'a-bl(e'), a.— ar"res-ta'tion, n. [Rare.] Arrest.— ar"rest-ee', n. Scots Law. The person in whose possession an arrester seizes property.— ar-res'tiv(e'), a. Tending or serving to arrest; in grammar, marking a restriction or qualification; as, the arrestive conjunctions, but, yet, only, etc.— ar-rest'ment, n. 1. A stoppage, as of growth. 2. Scots Law. An attachment or garnishment of property or credits in the hands of a third party.

ar-rest'¹, n. 1. The act of arresting, or the state of being arrested; a stoppage, cessation, or checking, as of movement, growth, etc.; any seizure or interruption.

In a society, it frequently happens that great activity in some one direction causes partial arrests of activity elsewhere.
SPENCER Universal Progress p. 411. [A. 1864.]

2. Law. A taking into custody; seizure of a person or (in Scots law) of goods by legal authority; apprehension; also, legal restraint; custody; as, to make an arrest; to put a man under arrest. Criminal arrest or apprehension may be made without warrant; civil arrest, whether on mesne process, final process, or in execution, must be effected by virtue of a special writ or order.

3. Mech. A contrivance to stop or check motion in a machine. 4. Fencing. A direct point delivered as part of an attack. 5†. A stop; an abiding or continuance. [< OF. arest, < arester; see ARREST, v.] — arrest of judgment, a stay of proceedings founded on a motion to suspend the entry of judgment on the verdict, for the purpose of reviewing the proceedings.

WILKIE COLLINS Legacy of Cain p. 162. [S. T. CO.]

3. To come at length; occur; as, so the day arrives.

Each event to come has also its spectrum — its shade; when the hour arrives, life enters it, the shadow becomes corporeal.
BULWER-LYTTON Last Days of Pompeii p. 140. [D. H. & CO. 1890.]

II. t. 1. [Archaic.] To reach in course; come to.

What time mine own [spirit] might . . .
Arrive at last the blessed goal.
TENNYSON In Memoriam lxxxiii, st. 11.

2†. To bring to shore. [< F. arriver, < LL. adripo, < L. ad, to, + ripa, shore.] ar-ryve'†.

SYN.: attain, come, enter, get to, land, reach. Attain is now oftenest used of abstract relations; as, to attain success. When applied to concrete matters, it commonly signifies the overcoming of hindrance and difficulty; as, the storm-beaten ship at length attained the harbor. Come is the general word for moving to or toward the place where the speaker or writer is or supposes himself to be. To reach is to come to from a considerable distance; to stretch the journey, so to speak, across the distance, as, in its original meaning, one reaches an object by stretching out the hand. One comes in from his garden; he reaches home from a journey. To arrive is to come to a destination, to reach a point intended or proposed. The European steamer arrives in Port, or reaches the harbor; the dismantled wreck drifts ashore, or comes to land. See ATTAIN. — ANT.: depart, embark, go away, leave, set out, set sail, start, weigh anchor. — PREP.: arrive at or in one port from another; at our destination; upon the scene.

ar-ro'ba, 1 ə-rō'bə; 2 ă-rō'bă, n. [Sp.] A Spanish weight and measure. See MEASURE; WEIGHT.

ar'ro-gance, 1 ar'o-gəns; 2 ăr'o-gănç, n. The state or quality of being arrogant; unreasonable or excessive assumption or assertion, as of superiority; overbearing pride. [OF., < L. arrogantia, < arrogo; see ARROGATE.]

SYN.: assumption, disdain, haughtiness, insolence, presumption, pride, superciliousness, vanity. Haughtiness thinks highly of itself and poorly of others. Arrogance claims much for itself and concedes little to others. Pride is an absorbing sense of one's own greatness; haughtiness feels one's own superiority to others; disdain sees contemptuously the inferiority of others to oneself. Presumption claims place of privilege above one's right; pride deems nothing too high. In the presence of superiors overweening pride manifests itself in presumption or insolence. Pride is too self-satisfied to care for praise; vanity intensely craves admiration and applause. Superciliousness, as if by the uplifted eyebrow, as its etymology suggests, silently manifests mingled haughtiness and disdain. Insolence is open and rude expression of contempt and hostility, generally from an inferior to a superior, as from a servant to a master or mistress. Assumption quietly takes for granted superiority and privilege which others would be slow to concede. See ASSURANCE; IMPERTINENCE. — PREP.: the arrogance of the nobility toward the common people.

ar'ro-gan-cy, n. 1. Arrogance. 2. That which is arrogant.

COLERIDGE Works, Aids to Reflection in vol. i, p. 139. [H. 1858.]

This sudden paleness of the spirited woman stuck in my heart like an arrow. CARLYLE Reminiscences, Irving p. 86. [S. 1881.]

2. One of various things resembling an arrow, as an arrow-like ornament, a pin or rod used as a mark in surveying, or [U. S.] the flower-stem of the sugar-cane.

And when the arrows of sunset lodged in the tree-tops bright.
ALICE CARY Pictures of Memory st. 2.

3. Fort. The passageway-work at the salient angles of a glacis. 4. [A-] Astron. The constellation Sagitta. [< AS. arewe, arh, arrow; cp. Goth. arhwazna, arrow.] — arrow'ar"um, n. ' Bot. Either of two stemless bog-herbs of the genus Peltandra of the arum family (Araceæ), with arrow-shaped leaves: (1) the green arrow-arum (P. virginica) with the spathe narrow, convolute, and green to the end; (2) the white arrow-arum (P. sagittæfolia) with the spathe expanded and white at the apex.— arrow'beam", n. The European spindle-tree.— a.-grass, n. 1. A rush-like plant of the genus Triglochin, of the pondweed family (Nataceæ): so called from the arrow-head appearance of the capsule after it splits. 2. A Brazilian grass (Gynerium saccharoides).— ar'row-leaf", n. A water-plant ar'row-head", 1 ar'o-hed"; 2 ăr'o-hĕd', n. 1. The sharp-pointed end or head, usually separate, of an arrow. The parts distinguished are the point, faces, edges, butt, tang, barb, and barb-piece.

Stone Arrow-heads of the American Indians.

Among savage nations they are commonly of stone or bone, sometimes of thorns, and occasionally of metal, fastened to the shaft by thongs. They are sometimes dipped in poison. Those of the middle ages were often barbed, and made with a socket. 2. The dart or tongue of an egg-and-dart molding.— ar'row-head"ed, a. Shaped like the head of a savage's arrow; triangular and barbed. ar'row-head"‡.— arrow-headed characters, cuneiform characters. See CUNEIFORM.

ar'row-head", n. 1. Any aquatic plant of the genus Sagittaria, of the water-plantain family (Alismaceæ), with arrow-shaped leaves. 2. A belemnite.

Ar'row Lake. 1. A lake in British Columbia, Canada: an expansion of the Columbia river; 95 m. long. 2. A lake between Minnesota and Canada; from this lake Arrow river leads to Lake Superior.

Ar'row Rock. A village in Saline county, Mo.

ar'row-root", 1 ar'o-rūt'; 2 ăr'o-ro͝ot', n. 1. A nutritious starch obtained from the fleshy rootstocks of a tropical American plant (Maranta arundinacea) of the ginger family, or from other species of Maranta. It is an easily digested food, well fitted for infants and convalescents. 2. A starch more or less like the foregoing, obtained from other plants, as from species of Zamia, Tacca, Curcuma, Manihot, etc. 3. The plant Maranta arundinacea; also, any other species of Maranta.— Chinese arrowroot, the edible farinaceous tubers of the Indian lotus (Nelumbo nucifera), much esteemed by the Chinese and Japanese.— Florida a., see ZAMIA. — Portland a., same as PORTLAND SAGO.

Arrowroot.
a, base; b, b, flowering stem; c, rhizome.

ar'row-shaft", n. See ARROW.

Ar'row-smith, 1 ar'o-smiṫh; 2 ăr'o-smiṫh, Aaron (7/11 1750–4/22 1823). An English geographer and map-maker.

ar'row-snake", a.-toothed, a.-worm, etc. See ARROW.

ar'row-y, 1 ar'o-ı; 2 ăr'o-y, a. 1. Resembling an arrow or arrows, as in shape, appearance, or motion; swift; sharp; darting.

> And arrowy frieze, and wedged ravelin.
> CAMPBELL Gertrude of Wyoming pt. iii, st. 25.
>
> With arrowy swiftness sped that light canoe.
> WHITTIER Bridal of Pennacook pt. vii, st. 4.

2. Abounding in or consisting of arrows.

ar-ro'yo, 1 ą-rō'yo; 2 ä-rō'yo, n. [-os, 1 -oz; 2 -ōs, pl.] [Sp. Am.] A small stream, or its dry bed; a deep dry gully.

> The section of country is traversed by deep gullies called arroyos. W. H. EMORY Report on U. S. and Mex. Bound. vol. i, p. 57.

Ar-ro'yo Gran'de, 1 ą-rō'yo grān'dē; 2 ä-rō'yo grän'dę. A town in San Luis Obispo county, Cal.

Ar-ro'yo Mo-ll'nos, 1 ą-rō'yo mo-ll'nōs; 2 ä-rō'yo mo-ll'nōs. A village in Caceres province, Spain, where Lord Hill defeated the French, Oct. 28, 1811.

ar-roz' ba-sī', 1 ą-rōth' bą-sī'; 2 ä-rōth' bä-sī'. [P. I.] An intoxicating drink made of fermented rice. [Sp., < Ar. arroz, rice; Pangasinan basi, liquor.]

Ar-ru' Islands, 1 ą-rū'; 2 ä-ru͝'. A group of islands west of West Guinea; 2,650 sq. m.; a Dutch possession.

'Ar'ry, 1 ar'ı; 2 ăr'y, n. Harry (as pronounced by uneducated cockneys): a humorous personification of the London costermonger. The designation has been made familiar by the London humorous press, celebrating the adventures of 'Arry on Sundays and bank-holidays in the company of his 'Arriet.— 'Ar'ry-ish, a. Coarse; jovial.

A. R. S. A., abbr. Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy; Associate of the Royal Society of Arts.

Ar'sa-ces, 1 ūr'sə-sīz or ar-sē'sīz; 2 ăr'sa-çēs or ăr-sā'çēs, n. The founder of the Parthian kingdom and the Arsacid dynasty; his successors assumed his name. See ARSACID.

Ar-sa'kes‡ [Gr.].

Ar-sac'id, 1 ar-sas'ıd; 2 ăr-săç'id, n. [-IDS, -I-DÆ, 1 -ı-dī; 2 -ı-dē, pl.] Any ruler styled Arsaces of a dynasty in Parthia and Armenia, dating from about 250 B. C. to A. D. 224 in Parthia and to 428 in Armenia.— Ar-sac'id, Ar-sac'i-dan, a.

Ar"sa-mas', 1 ūr'za-mās"; 2 ăr'şä-mäs', n. A town in Nijni-Novgorod province, Russia.

Ar'sa-phes, 1 ūr'sə-fīz; 2 ăr'sa-fēş, n. [Gr.] An Egyptian deity, Hershef.

Ar'sa-reth, 1 ūr'sə-reṫh; 2 ăr'sa-rĕth, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). 2 Esd. xiii, 45.

ar-schin', n. Same as ARSHIN.

arse, 1 ūrs; 2 ärs, n. 1. [Low.] The buttocks, or hind part. 2. That part of a pulley-block into which the rope-strap is fitted. [< AS. ærs; cp. Gr. orros, the rump.]— arse'foot", n. A grebe or penguin.— arse'-smart", n. The smartweed (Polygonum hydropiper).— arse'ward†, adv. & a. Backward; perverse.— arse'ward'ly†, adv.

ar'se-dine, 1 ūr'sı-dın or -dın; 2 ăr'se-dĭn or -dēn, n. A malleable alloy of prepared copper and zinc in thin leaves, used for decorating.

ar'se-nal, 1 ūr'sı-nal; 2 ăr'se-nal, n. 1. A repository for arms and munitions of war; also, a public establishment for their manufacture; an armory.

> Shook the Arsenal, and fulmined over Greece.
> MILTON P. R. bk. iv, l. 270.

2. Any store of things used in controversy; as, an arsenal of proofs, references, etc. [Sp. (also darsena), < Ar. dār-aç-çināᶜah, workshop.]

ar'se-nate, 1 ūr'sı-nēt; 2 ăr'se-nāt, n. Chem. A salt of arsenic acid. ar-se'ni-ate‡.

ar"sen-di-meth'yl, 1 ūr"sen-dai-meṫh'il; 2 ăr'sĕn-dı-mĕth'yl, n. Cacodyl.

Ar-se'ni-an, 1 ar-sī'nı-ən; 2 ăr-sē'ni-an, n. Ch. Hist. An adherent of Arsenius, patriarch of Constantinople (13th century), who excommunicated the emperor Michael Palæologus for putting out the eyes of John, the youthful heir to the throne.

ar"se-ni'a-sis, 1 ūr'sı-nai'ə-sis; 2 ăr'se-nī'a-sĭs, n. Toxicol. The bodily condition caused by chronic arsenical poisoning. ar-sen'i-cal-ism‡; ar-sen'i-cism‡.

ar-sen'ic, 1 ar-sen'ık; 2 ăr-sĕn'ic, a. Chem. Pertaining to or containing arsenic, especially when combined in its pentad valence; as, arsenic oxid (As_2O_5); arsenic sulfid (As_2S_5). Compare ARSENIOUS. ar-sen'i-cal‡.— ar-senic acid. 1. A colorless white crystalline compound (H_3AsO_4) used in calico-printing. Called more properly arsenic hydrate. 2. Formerly, arsenic pentoxid (As_2O_5).

ar'se-nic, 1 ūr'sı-nik; 2 ăr'se-nĭc (XIII), n. Chem. 1. A steel-gray, brittle, volatile, non-metallic element. See table under ELEMENT. 2. The white, tasteless, poisonous arsenious oxid (As_2O_3). arsenic trioxid‡; arsenious anhydrid‡. 3†. Orpiment; sometimes, realgar. [F., < L. arsenicum, < Gr. arsenikon, < arsēn, male.]— ar'se-nic black", n. See table under BLACK, n.— a.-antidote, n. Chem. Hydrated ferric oxid and magnesia.— a. disulfid, a red or yellow compound (As_2S_2) found native as realgar, but usually manufactured artificially: used in the industrial arts.— a. hydrid. 1. Arsine. 2. A brown solid (As_2H_2) produced from sodium arsenid.— a. pentasulfid, a yellow solid (As_2S_5) produced when an arsenic acid solution is treated with hydrogen sulfid.— a. pentoxid. a white compound (As_2O_5), produced when arsenic acid is heated.— a. trichlorid, an oily colorless compound ($AsCl_3$) which is extremely poisonous.— a. trisulfid (Chem.), same as ARSENIC YELLOW. See table under YELLOW.— flowers of a., the fine white powder formed when arsenic trioxid (As_2O_3) is sublimed.— red a., same as REALGAR.— white a., same as ARSENIC, 2.— ar-sen'i-cate, tt. To combine or treat with arsenic; give arsenical nature to. ar-sen'i-cal-ize‡; ar-sen'i-cise‡; ar-sen'i-cize‡.— ar-sen'i-cism, n. Same as ARSENIASIS.— ar-sen'i-cite, n. Mineral. Same as PHARMACOLITE.— ar-sen"i-coph'a-gy, n. The habit of eating arsenic.— ar"se-nif'er-ous, a. Containing or yielding arsenic.

ar-sen'i-cal, 1 ar-sen'ı-kəl; 2 ăr-sĕn'i-cal, n. Any preparation of arsenic used as an insecticide.

ar'se-nid, } 1 ūr'sı-nid, -nid or -nəid; 2 ăr'se-nĭd, -nīd or ar'se-nide, } -nīd, n. Chem. A compound of arsenic, in which arsenic is the negative element; as, cobalt arsenid ($CoAs_2$).

ar"se-nil'lo, 1 ūr'sı-nil'o; 2 ăr'se-nĭl'o, n. The granular variety of Chilean atacamite as it appears in commerce.

ar-se"ni-o-ple'ite, 1 ūr-sī'nı-o-plī'ait; 2 ăr-sē'ni-o-plē'ĭt, n. Mineral. A red-brown hydrous manganese arsenate: usually massive. [< ARSENATE + Gr. plēos, full.]

ar-se"ni-o-sid'er-ite, 1 ar-sī'nı-o-sid'ər-ait; 2 ăr-sē'ni-o-sĭd'ēr-ĭt, n. Mineral. A fibrous yellowish-brown arsenate ($H_6Ca_2Fe_4As_6O_{21}$), crystallizing in the tetragonal or hexagonal system. [< ARSENATE + Gr. sidēros, iron.]

ar-se'ni-ous, 1 ar-sī'nı-us; 2 ăr-sē'ni-ŭs, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or containing arsenic, especially when combined in its triad valence; as, arsenious oxid (As_2O_3); arsenious sulfid (As_2S_3). ar'se-nous‡.— arsenious acid. 1. A white crystalline compound (H_3AsO_3). 2. Formerly, arsenious oxid.— a. anhydrid, a. oxid, arsenic trioxid. See ARSENIC, n. [arseniasis.

ar'se-nism, 1 ūr'sı-nizm; 2 ăr'se-nĭşm, n. Chronic ar'se-nite, 1 ūr'sı-nait; 2 ăr'se-nīt, n. 1. Chem. A salt of arsenious acid. 2. Mineral. Same as ARSENOLITE.

ar-se'ni-um, 1 ūr-sī'nı-um; 2 ăr-sē'ni-ŭm, n. Chem. Arsenic.

ar"se-ni'u-ret, 1 ūr'sı-nai'yu-ret; 2 ăr'se-nī'yu-rĕt, n. Chem. Arsenid. ar-sen'u-ret‡.— ar"se-ni'u-ret"ed, a. Chem. Chemically combined with arsenic to form an arsenid; as, arsenureted hydrogen. ar'se-net-ted‡; ar-se'ni-at"ed‡; ar"se-ni'u-ret"ted‡.

ar-sen'o-blast, 1 ar-sen'o-blast; 2 ăr-sĕn'o-blăst, n. Embryol. One of the hypothetical male elements into which a sexual cell (genoblast) is supposed to separate.

> In both cases the sexual cell separates into a single female element or thelyblast, and probably two male elements or arsenoblasts, which are capable of multiplication by division.
> C. S. MINOT Human Embryology p. 78.

[< Gr. arsēn, male, + blastos, germ.]

ar"se-no-lam'prite, 1 ūr'sı-no-lam'prait; 2 ăr'se-no-lăm'prit, n. Mineral. A metallic lead-gray variety of native arsenic containing bismuth. [< ARSENIC + Gr. lampros, bright.]

ar-sen'o-lite, 1 ar-sen'o-lait; 2 ăr-sĕn'o-lit, n. Mineral. A white arsenious oxid (As_2O_3) with occasional yellow or red tinge, crystallizing in the isometric system. [< ARSENIC + -LITE.] ar'sen-ite‡.

ar-sen"o-py'rite, 1 ar-sen'o-[or ūr'sı-no-]pai'rait; 2 ăr-sĕn'o-[or ăr'se-no-]pī'rĭt, n. Mineral. A silver-white iron sulfarsenid ($FeAsS$), that crystallizes in the orthorhombic system. [< ARSENIC + PYRITE.]

Ar-se'tes, 1 ar-sī'tiz; 2 ăr-sē'tēş, n. In Tasso's Jerusalem Delivered, an aged eunuch, foster-father to Clorinda.

ar'sha rite, 1 ūr'shə; 2 ăr'sha. A Hindu marriage form requiring the gift of at least one cow and one bull from the bridegroom to the bride's father. [< Sans. ârsha.] ar-shin', 1 ar-shin'; 2 ăr-shĭn', n. [Rus.] An Eastern measure of length, varying in different places from about 28 to 39 inches. See MEASURE. ar-schin'‡; ar-sheen'‡; ar-shine'‡.

ar'sin, } 1 ūr'sın, -sın or -sin; 2 ăr'sin, -sin or -sĭn, n. ar'sine, } Chem. 1. A compound formed by replacing the hydrogen of arsenic with an organic radical; as, methyl arsin, $(CH_3)_3As$. 2. Arseniureted hydrogen (AsH_3). [< ARSENIC.]

ar-sin'ic, 1 ar-sin'ık; 2 ăr-sĭn'ic, a. Chem. Relating to or naming any of a series of acids obtained from arsenic acid by substituting univalent hydrocarbon radicals for two hydroxyl groups: general formula, $RRAsO_2H$.

Ar-sin'o-e, 1 ar-sin'o-ı; 2 ăr-sĭn'o-ē, n. 1. The daughter of Ptolemy I., king of Egypt (born 316 B. C.); wife of Lysimachus, and of her own brother, Ptolemy II. 2. In Molière's Le Misanthrope, a prude. 3. Same as MEDINET-EL-FAYUM.

Ar"si-no-i-the'ri-um, 1 ūr'sı-nō-ı-thī'rı-um; 2 ăr'sı-nō-ı-thē'rı-ŭm, n. Paleon. A genus of gigantic Eocene mammals, the remains of which were discovered in the desert of the Fayoum in western Egypt. The group is allied to the dinoceras and may be classed with the Amblypoda, having elephantine feet with the cuboid supporting the navicular. The earliest and typical species (Arsinoitherium zitteli) has two pairs of protuberances on the upper part of the head. Another Egyptian species (A. andrewsii) is larger. [< Gr. Arsinoë, daughter of Ptolemy I., king of Egypt, + thērion, wild beast.]

Ar'sis, 1 ūr'sıs; 2 ăr'sis, n. [-SES, 1 -sīz; 2 -sēş, pl.] 1. Pros. (1) The syllable that receives the ictus or stress of voice, as opposed to the thesis; also, the stress itself; the ictus. See ICTUS.

> The emphasis with which . . . parts of a verse are pronounced is called the Arsis, . . . also . . . the syllable on which the emphasis falls. KÜHNER Gr. Gram. tr. by Edwards, p. 574. [A. 1853.]

(2) In the original Greek usage, the raising of the foot in beating time, and hence the metrically unaccented part of the foot: the reverse of modern usage. 2. Mus. The up beat in beating time; the unaccented part of a bar. 3. Physics. A periodic rhythmical variation in the intensity of sound. [L., < Gr. arsis, < airō, raise.]

A. R. S. L., abbr. Associate of the Royal Society of Literature.

A. R. S. M., abbr. Associate of the Royal School of Mines.

ars'nick-er, 1 ūrs'nik-ər; 2 ärs'nik-er, n. [Bahamas.] The great blue heron.

ar'son, 1 ūr'sən; 2 ăr'son, n. In common law, the malicious burning of another's house: now extended to the firing of structures other than dwelling-houses, and the wilful burning of one's own house when insured. [OF., < ardoir (pp. ars), < L. ardeo, burn.]— ar'son-ette', n. [Eng.] A woman who resorts to arson for political purposes.

—ar'son-ist, n. A person guilty of arson. ar'son-ite‡.

ar'so-nate, 1 ūr'so-nēt; 2 ăr'so-nāt, n. Chem. A salt derived from an arsonic acid.

ar-son'ic, 1 ar-sen'ık; 2 ăr-sŏn'ic, a. Chem. Relating to or naming any one of a series of acids of the general formula $RAsO_3H_2$; as, ethyl arsonic acid ($C_2H_5AsO_3$). They are obtained from arsenic acid when hydroxyl is replaced by a hydrocarbon radical.

ar-so'ni-um, 1 ar-sō'nı-um; 2 ăr-sō'ni-ŭm, n. Chem. A hypothetical radical (AsH_4) containing arsenic, which corresponds to ammonium (NH_4). No compounds of the simple radical are known. In tetramethyl arsonium iodid ($As(CH_3)_4I$) carbon radicals replace the hydrogen. [< ARSENIC + AMMONIUM.]

Ar'souf, 1 ūr'sūf; 2 ăr'su͝f, n. A village in Syria, where the crusaders under Richard I. of England defeated the Saracens under Saladin, Sept. 6, 1191.

ars-phen-am'in or ars-phen"a-min', n. [U. S.] Same as SALVARSAN. ars-phen-am'ine‡.

ars po-et'i-ca, 1 ūrz po-et'ı-kə; 2 ärş po-ĕt'i-ca. [L.] 1. The poetic art. 2. [A- P-] The title of a versified epistle by Horace to the Pisos which is characterized by correct reasoning and apt expression. 3. A masterly commentary on the art of poetry.

art', 1 ūrt; 2 ärt, 2d per. sing. pres. ind. of BE, v. Now used in poetry and elevated language, "thou art" having been superseded by "you are."

> Art thou that traitor-angel, art thou he,
> Who first broke peace in heaven? MILTON P. L. bk. ii, l. 689.

[< AS. eart; cp. ARE, v.]

art²†, tt. To constrain; urge.

art, n. 1. Practise as guided by correct principles in the use of means for the attainment of a desired end. (1) Skill in applying knowledge or ability to the accomplishment of a concrete purpose; as, the art employed in producing a poem.

> And sleights of art and feats of strength went round.
> GOLDSMITH Deserted Village l. 22.
> There is no art so divine as that of . . . quickening other minds > CHANNING Works, Ministry for Poor p. 84. [A. U. A. 1883.]

(2) A system of rules devised for procuring some scientific, esthetic, or practical result; also, the mastery of such rules; by extension, a branch of learning to be studied in order to be applied; as, the art of arithmetic; the seven liberal arts of the schoolmen.

> An art will, in particular, present exercises for the practical application of its rules, which would be entirely foreign to the design . . . of a science. DAY Art of Discourse, p. 2. [s. 1867.]

(3) Facility resulting from practise; dexterity; hence, power.

> Still sways their souls with that commanding art
> That dazzles, leads, yet chills the vulgar heart.
> BYRON Corsair can. 1, st. 8.

2. Esthetics. (1) The principles of artistic construction and esthetic criticism; the application of the principles of esthetics to the study, criticism, and production of artistic works. (2) The embodiment of beautiful thought in sensuous forms, as in marble or speech; artistic construction or expression.

> Art is the external manifestation of the idea, the revelation of the invisible reality through the senses.
> W. S. LILLY On Right and Wrong ch. 10, p. 228. [C. & H. 1890.]

(3) The embodiment in concrete and sensuous forms, as in marble, wood, tones, or language, of thoughts expressive, and feelings appreciative, of the beautiful.

The arts are distinguished as the esthetic or fine arts, or arts of beauty, and the useful, industrial, or mechanic arts, or arts of utility. The useful arts include the trades, which require chiefly manual labor or skill, and which engage the ingenuity of the artizan; the fine arts, those which call for the exercise of taste and imagination, and which furnish the sphere of the artist. The fine arts may be classed in general as (1) the free, whose object is to create form for its own sake, embracing painting, engraving, sculpture, music, and poetry; and (2) the dependent, whose object is to create form that shall minister to some utility, embracing architecture, landscape-gardening, decoration, ceramics, glass-making, the goldsmiths' art, and other applications of the principles of artistic construction or arrangement. The fine arts are further divided according to the kind of material which they employ, as landscape-gardening, architecture, sculpture, painting, and poetry, or prose dramatic literature. It will be noticed that this classification is based chiefly on the plasticity of the material.

> While manufacture is the work of hands only, art is the work of the whole spirit of man.
> RUSKIN Queen of the Air pt. iii, p. 121. [s. E. & CO. 1869.]

The artist, in no matter what kind of material or branch of the arts, must be moved and guided by the sentiment of beauty.
G. T. Ladd Knowledge, Life, and Reality p. 384. [d. m. & co. '09.]

(4) Mastery in works of taste, in either the execution or the product; as, Raffael's art was wonderful. 3. Immoral shrewdness or artificial conduct; craft; cunning. 4. An organized body of men trained in some trade or vocation; a gild. [F., < L. ar(t-)s, skill.]

Syn: address, aptitude, cleverness, dexterity, esthetics, ingenuity, knack, skill, tact. In the highest sense, art has no synonym. The term esthetics denotes the theory of the beautiful which furnishes the basis of art. For subordinate senses, see artifice; business. For the distinction between science and art, see synonyms for science.

—art and part (Scots Law), complicity in instigating crime (art), and part in committing it.—art bronze, a composition of tin and copper used by sculptors.—art nouveau [F.], lit., new art: applied to a school of artists who have abandoned the old order and conventions, especially of decorative art.—art'-pump"kin, n. See balsam-pear.—art square, a square rug of ingrain carpet.—art union, a society formed for the encouragement of the arts, especially of design.—black art, necromancy; magic. See necromancy.—faculty of arts (as distinguished from faculty of law, faculty of medicine, etc.), originally, the body of instructors who had charge of the earlier studies of the course; now, those in charge of the academical or collegiate course proper.—landscape art, the art of improving the natural beauty of scenery.—liberal arts, the higher branches of learning: so called because among the Romans only freemen were allowed to pursue them. In medieval universities they included the trivium and the quadrivium. See trivium and quadrivium. In modern times they embrace the languages, history, science, philosophy, etc.—the art preservative of all arts, printing.—the manly art, or the art of self-defense, boxing; in England, the noble art.

-art, suffix. See -ard.

Ar'te-mis, 1 är'tı-mis; 2 är'te-mis, n. [L.] Gr. Myth. The Greek goddess, one of the great Olympians, identified by the Romans with their Diana. (1) The Greek Artemis, sister of Apollo, goddess of the chase, from which she was known as Agrotera. She was protectress of the young, goddess of chastity and of the moon. She punishes with sudden death those who offend her, but, like Apollo, she also heals and purifies. Her patronage extended over flocks, herds, rivers, lakes, agriculture, and vegetation of all kinds. Altho a virgin goddess, unmoved by love, she is none the less patroness of marriage and childbirth and was worshiped as such under the epithet Parthenos. (2) The Ardallan Artemis has no association with Apollo, but remains the huntress and goddess of the nymphs. (3) The Taurian Artemis, to whom all strangers thrown on the coasts of Tauris were sacrificed, was mainly identified with animals; for example, with bears as Brauronia, and with bulls as Tauropolos. (4) The Ephesian Artemis was totally distinct from the Greek divinity; she was a nature goddess and her statue at Ephesus with the many breasts represents her as the all-nourishing mother of the vegetable and animal kingdom. In art Artemis is represented either as the huntress, in the short tunic, or as goddess of the moon in flowing robes and veiled face. Her attributes are the bow, quiver, and arrows, the spear, and the hind and the dogs of the chase. See Diana.

ar-te'ri-a, 1 ar-tı'rı-ə; 2 är-tē'ri-a, n. [-æ, 1 -ı; 2 -ē, pl.] Anat. An artery.—arteria aspera, the windpipe.—ar-te'ri-ac, a. Of or pertaining to the windpipe.

ar-te'ri-al, 1 ar-tı'rı-əl; 2 är-tē'ri-al, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or contained or carried in the arteries or an artery; as, arterial circulation; the arterial system. 2. Resembling an artery, as in having a main channel and a branching system; as, arterial drainage.

The rich arterial rivers. Bailey Festus, A Ruined Temple sc. 11.

ar-te"ri-are'tl-a, 1 ar-tı"rı-ûrk'shı-ə; 2 är-tē"ri-ärc'shi-a, n. Pathol. Arterial stenosis. [< artery + L. arctus, narrow.]

ar"te-ri'a-sis, 1 ôr"tı-rı'ə-sis; 2 är"te-ri'a-sis, n. Pathol. Arterial degeneration. [< artery.]

ar'ter-in, 1 är'tər-in; 2 är'ter-in, n. Physiol. Chem. A compound forming the coloring-matter of the blood. Compare hemoglobin; oxyhemoglobin. [< artery.]

ar-te'ri-o-, 1 ar-tı'rı-o-; 2 är-tē'ri-o-. Derived from Latin arteria, an artery: a combining form.—ar-te"ri-o-cap'il-la-ry, a. Of or pertaining to the arteries and capillaries.—ar-te"ri-o-fi-bro'sis, n. Pathol. Fibroid arterial stenosis.—ar-te'ri-o-gram, n. A sphygmogram.—ar-te"ri-og'ra-phy, n. 1. The anatomy, etc., of the arteries or the arterial system. 2. The production of graphic representations of the action and state of the pulse.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

ar-te'ri-ole, 1 ar-tı'rı-ōl; 2 är-tē'ri-ōl, n. Anat. A little artery.

ar-te"ri-ol'o-gy, n. Anat. A scientific treatise on the arteries.—ar-te"ri-o-ma-la'ci-a, n. Pathol. Softening of the coats of arteries. ar-te"ri-o-mal"a-co'sis‡.—ar"te-ri-om'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the degree of increase or diminution of the caliber of an artery due to the pulsations of the heart.—ar-te"ri-op'a-thy, n. Pathol. Diseases of the arteries in general.—ar-te"ri-o-phle-bot'o-my, n. Surg. The practise of blood-letting on the skin, as by leeches.—ar-te"ri-o-scle-ro'sis, n. Pathol. The thickening and hardening of the walls of an artery. When this is general throughout the arterial coats it is known as diffuse arteriosclerosis; when localized at points of greatest strain, as nodular a.—ar-te"ri-o-scle-rot'ic, a.—ar-te"ri-o-strep'sis, n. Surg. Same as torsion, 1 (3).—ar-te'ri-o-tome, n. Surg. An instrument for severing arteries.—ar-te"ri-ot'o-my, n. 1. Anat. Scientific dissection of arteries. 2. Surg. Any cutting or opening of an artery, as for letting blood.—ar-te"ri-o-ve'nous, a. Anat. Relating to both arteries and veins.

ar"te-ri'tis, 1 ar"tı-rai'tis or -rı'tis; 2 är-te-ri'tis or -rī'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of an artery. [< Gr. arteria; see artery.]—arteritis deformans, same as endarteritis deformans.

ar"te-ri-ver'sion, 1 ar"tı-rı-vûr'zhən; 2 är"te-ri-vĕr'shon, n. Surg. The closing of the mouths of arteries, in amputation, by everting the divided ends. [< artery + L. verto, turn.]—ar'te-ri-vert"er, n. Surg. An instrument consisting of fine hooks borne in a sheath for performing arteriversion.

ar'ter-y, 1 ûr'tər-ı; 2 är'ter-y, tr. [-ied; -y-ing.] To supply with or as if with arteries; flow through, like an artery; as, rivers artery the land.

ar'ter-y, n. [-ies, 1 -ız; 2 -ıs, pl.] 1. One of the tubular vessels that convey blood from the heart to the tissues of the body. There are two arteries in direct connection with the heart, (1) the aorta, which, with its branches, conveys pure or arterial blood from the left ventricle to every part of the body, and (2) the pulmonary artery, which conveys impure or venous blood from the right ventricle, to the lungs, whence it is returned purified to the left side of the heart. Arteries in their ultimate minute branchings connect with the veins by capillaries. They are named usually (1) from the part of the body where they are found, as the brachial, the iliac, or the metacarpal artery; or (2) from the organ which they supply, as the hepatic or the ovarian artery. See next page.

My fate cries out,
And makes each petty artery in this body
As hardy as the Nemean lion's nerve.
Shakespeare Hamlet act i, sc. 4.

2. Any great channel; as, an artery of trade.

It was soon discovered there that these great arteries of commerce [railways] could not be treated upon the same basis as an ordinary factory. Simon Sterne in The Forum Sept., 1890, p. 49.

3†. The windpipe or trachea; the arteria aspera. [< L. arteria, < Gr. artēria, prob. < aïrō, raise.]—facial artery, the branch of the external carotid artery that passes up over the lower jaw and supplies the superficial portion of the face.—hemorrhoidal arteries, three vessels that supply the lower end of the rectum.—hepatic a., the branch of the celiac axis that supplies the liver.—intercostal arteries, the arteries that supply the space between the ribs.—lingual a., the branch of the external carotid artery that supplies the tongue.—lumbar arteries, four or five pairs of branches from the abdominal aorta that supply the lumbar regions of the back.—maxillary arteries, the arteries that supply the region of the jaws. The internal maxillary is a terminal branch of the external carotid; the external maxillary is the facial artery.

Ar-te'sian, 1 ar-tı'ʒən; 2 är-tē'zhan, a. Of or pertaining to Artois, France, or a well originating there. [< F. artésien, < OF. Artois, Artois.]—Artesian well, a well bored down to a point, usually at great depth, where the water-pressure, owing to the conformation of the geological strata, is so great as to force the water out at the surface, or it rises nearer to the surface: now often applied to any very deep bored well, as for petroleum, and even where pumping is necessary, as in an ordinary driven well.

Ar"te-vel'de, 1 ûr'tı-vel'də; 2 är'te-vĕl'de, n. 1. Jacob van (1290–9/₂₇1345), a Flemish patriot; leader of insurgents at Ghent. 2. Philip van (1340?–10/₂₇1382), a Flemish leader; son of Jacob; hero of Sir Henry Taylor's play Philip van Artevelde.

art'ful, 1 ûrt'ful; 2 ärt'ful, a. 1. Produced or characterized by craft or cunning; as, an artful person or device.

In peace, he has too often been the dupe of artful traffic.
Irving Sketch-Book, Indian Character p. 343. [g. p. p. 1861.]

2. Produced by art as opposed to nature; artificial; unreal; as, an artful simplicity. 3. [Archaic.] Characterized by or exhibiting art; skilful; ingenious.

'Artful' did not any more than 'cunning' imply art which had degenerated into artifice or trick.
Trench Select Glossary p. 13. [e. p. & co. 1890.]

4†. Versed in the arts; learned.—-ly, adv.—-ness, n.

Syn: adroit, crafty, cunning, deceitful, designing, knowing, maneuvering, sharp, shrewd, sly, subtle, tricky, wily. See astute; insidious; politic.—Ant.: artless, candid, frank, guileless, honest, ingenuous, innocent, naive, open, sincere, undesigning, unsophisticated.

Ar'the-gall, 1 är'thı-gal; 2 är'the-gäl, n. In Spenser's Faerie Queene, brother of Arthur; called Artegall in the latter part of the poem. Ar'te-gal‡.

ar'the-mis, 1 är'thı-mis; 2 är'the-mis, n. A butterfly (Basilarchia arthemis), with velvety chocolate-black upper side of wings marked with white bands; the white admiral.

ar-thrag'ra, 1 ar-thrag'rə; 2 är-thrăg'ra, n. Pathol. Gouty inflammation of a joint or joints. [< arthro- + Gr. agra, a catching.]

ar'thral, 1 är'thrəl; 2 är'thral, a. Of or pertaining to an arthron or joint.—ar-thral'gi-a, n. Pathol. Neuralgic pain in a joint.—ar-thral'gic, a.

ar-threc'to-my, 1 ar-threk'to-mı; 2 är-thrĕc'to-my, n. Surg. The removal of a limb; also, the opening of a joint to cut away or to scrape diseased parts. [< arthro- + Gr. ektomē, a cutting.]

ar-thrit'ic, 1 ar-thrit'ık; 2 är-thrit'ic, n. A person afflicted with gout.—ar-thrit'ic, a. Pathol. Pertaining to the joints or to arthritis.—ar-thrit'i-cal‡.

ar-thrit'i-cin, 1 ar-thrit'ı-sin; 2 är-thrit'i-çin, n. Chem. Same as piperazin. [< arthritis.] ar-thrit'i-cine‡.

ar-thri'tis, 1 ar-thrai'tis or -thri'tis; 2 är-thri'tis or -thri'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of a joint, as in gout. [L., < Gr. arthritis, < arthron, joint.] ar-thro'si-a‡.

ar'thri-tism, 1 ûr'thrı-tizm; 2 är'thri-tĭsm, n. Pathol. 1. A condition which tends toward disease of the joints. 2. Gout.

ar'thri-um, 1 ûr'thrı-um; 2 är'thri-ŭm, n. [-a, pl.] Entom. The small penultimate joint of the tarsus in certain beetles. [< Gr. arthron, joint.]

ar'thro-, 1 ûr'thro-; 2 är'thro-. From Greek arthron, joint: a combining form.—ar"thro-bac-te'ri-um, n. Bot. A bacterium whose reproduction is effected by arthrospores.—ar'thro-branch, ar"thro-bran'chi-a, n. Crust. A branchial plume grown to the membranous articulation between the coxa and body.—ar-throc'a-ce, n. Pathol. 1. Disease of the joints, characterized by caries or dead bone. 2. An endemic disease that attacks very young animals, as calves, colts, etc.—ar"thro-ca-col'o-gy, n. The pathology of the joints.—ar"thro-chon-dri'tis, n. Pathol. Inflammation of an articular cartilage.—Ar"thro-cri'na, n. pl. Echin. An order of crinoids, embracing Secondary and Tertiary forms, having the plates of the calyx united by articulation.—ar'thro-derm, n. Zool. The outer covering of an articulate invertebrate, as the shell of a lobster.—ar-throd'e-sis, n. Surg. Fixation of a joint.

ar-thro'di-a, 1 ar-thrō'dı-ə; 2 är-thrō'di-a, n. [-æ, 1 -ı; 2 -ē, pl.] Anat. A joint in which the articulating surfaces are flat or nearly so, to admit of a free gliding movement in every direction, as in the joint between the patella and the femur. [< Gr. arthrōdia, < arthron, joint, + eidos, form.]—ar-thro'di-al, a.—ar-throd'ic, a.

Ar-throd'i-ra, n. pl. Ich. The Placodermi, in the narrowest sense.—ar-throd'i-ran, ar'thro-dire, n.—ar-throd'i-rous, a.—ar"thro-dyn'i-a, n. Pathol. Pain in a joint, as in cases of chronic rheumatism.—ar"thro-dyn'ic, a.—ar"thro-em"py-e'sis, n. Pathol. The formation of purulent matter in a joint. ar"thro-em"py-e'ma‡.—Ar"thro-gas'tra, n. pl. Arach. A division or legion of arachnids having a jointed abdomen or tail, including the scorpions and false scorpions. Ar"thro-gas'tres‡.—ar"thro-gas'tran, a.—ar-throg'ra-phy, n. A scientific description of the joints.—ar"thro-gry-po'sis, n. Pathol. 1. Flexure of a joint. 2. A tetanoid spasm. See ankylosis.—ar"thro-il-thi'a-sis, n. Pathol. A morbid condition, such as gout, in which calcareous matter is deposited in the joints.—ar-throl'o-gy, n. 1. The branch of anatomy that treats of joints. 2†. The finger-speech of the deaf and dumb.—ar'thro-mere, n. Zool. Any typical segment in the body of an articulate invertebrate; a somite.—ar"thro-mer'ic, a.

ar"thro-neu-ral'gi-a, 1 ûr"thro-nıu-ral'jı-ə; 2 är"thro-nū-răl'ji-a, n. Pathol. Neuralgia of a joint.

ar-throp'a-thy, 1 ar-throp'ə-thı; 2 är-thrŏp'a-thy, n. Pathol. 1. A disease of the joints. 2. A morbid condition of the joints described by Charcot as belonging to the prodromal stage of tabes. Gould Illus. Dict. of Med.

ar'thro-phragm, 1 ûr'thro-fram; 2 är'thro-frăm, n. Zool. A partition between the joints in arthropods.—ar"thro-phy'ma, n. Pathol. A swelling or a tumor in a joint.—ar'thro-plas"ty, n. Surg. Artificial formation of joints.—ar"thro-plas'tic, a.—ar'thro-pleure, n. Zool. The side-piece of an arthromere. ar"thro-pleu'ra‡.

Ar-throp'o-da, 1 ar-throp'o-də; 2 är-thrŏp'o-da, n. pl. Zool. A subkingdom of animals, including invertebrates with jointed legs, as insects, spiders, and crabs. [< arthro- + Gr. pous (pod-), foot.]—ar'thro-pod, a. & n.—ar-throp'o-dan, a. & n.—ar-throp'o-dous or -dal, a.—Ar"thro-po'ma-ta, n. pl. Conch. An order of brachiopods having an articulating hinge and no anus.—ar"thro-po'ma-tous, a.—Ar"throp-ter'i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A Paleotropical family of pentatomoidean bugs with the scutellum very large and tarsi 2-jointed. Ar-throp'ter-us, n. (t. g.)—ar-throp'ter-id, a. & n.—ar-throp'ter-oid, a.—ar-throp'ter-ous, a. Having the rays articulated, as a fin of a malacopterygian fish.—ar"thro-py-o'sis, n. Pathol. Same as arthroempyesis.—ar-thro'si-a, n. See arthritis.—ar-thro'sis, n. [-ses, pl.] Anat. Articulation; connection of parts by joints; a joint.—ar'thro-spore, n. Bot. One of a series of spores united like a string of beads: formed by fission as in certain bacteria.—ar-thros'po-rous, a. Bot. Bearing arthrospores; producing spores by simple separation of members. ar"thro-spor'ic‡.—ar"thro-ste-ri'gma, n. [-ma-ta, pl.] Bot.

ARTERIAL SYSTEM OF MAN.

The numbers preceding the names refer to the corresponding numbers upon the illustrations.
Two arterial trunks arise from the heart: the pulmonary artery from the right side (see 1 in illus.), distributed by right and left branches (see 2 and 3 in illus.) to the lungs, and the aorta from the left side, distributed to all other parts of the body. It is from the latter that the arteries having special names are derived. The principal branches are given below.

The style of type is intended to indicate approximately the size of vessels, as follows:
Boldface = 1/3 inch in diameter or larger
CAPS AND SMALL CAPS = 1/4 inch in diameter
SMALL CAPS = 1/5 inch in diameter
Italics = 1/7 inch in diameter
Roman = 1/12 inch in diameter or smaller

The style of letters prefixed to the names indicates the order of derivation, as

Surg.* The cutting into a joint.— ar-throx'e-sis, n. The surgical process of scraping the surface of joints to remove adherent growths.— Ar"thro-zo'a, n. pl. Zool. A division of the animal kingdom, comprising the arthropods and nematoid worms. [< ARTHRO- + Gr. zōē, life.]— ar"thro-zo'ic, a.

Ar'thur, 1 är'thur; 2 är'thûr, n. 1. A masculine personal name. F. Ar"thur', 1 ar'tür', 2 är'tür', Ar"tus', 1 ar'tüs', 2 är'tüs'; It. Ar-tu'ro, 1 ar-tü'ro, 2 är-tu'ro; L. Ar-thu'rus, 1 ar-thü'rus, 2 är-thû'rŭs. 2. One of the last of the British chieftains who struggled against the Anglo-Saxon power in the 6th century. It is impossible to discriminate between the historical and the legendary in the case of Arthur, as a vast amount of mythical romance has clustered around his name, and has been immortalized in Celtic, English, and French poetry, forming the subject of a great part of the Mabinogion, of Malory's Morted'Arthur, and of Tennyson's poem, Idylls of the King. All that is historically certain is that Arthur defended West Britain against the Saxons and was killed in a decisive battle fought either at Camlan in Cornwall or Mountbadon in Somersetshire in the year 520. The Welsh long cherished the belief that Arthur had been miraculously transported to Fairyland and would one day return to lead them to victory. For Arthur's famous sword see EXCALIBUR; for his company of knights see KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE. 3. (1187–1203). Son of Geoffrey Plantagenet; nephew of King John of England; said to have been murdered by his uncle at Rouen, Normandy; introduced in Shakespeare's King John. 4. Chester Alan (1830–1886), 21st President of the United States; succeeded on the assassination of President Garfield. [Celt., high.]

Ar'thur-et, 1 är'thur-et; 2 är'thûr-ĕt, n. In Scott's Redgauntlet, the surname of two sisters, Seraphina and Angelica.

Ar'thur Gride. In Dickens's Nicholas Nickleby, an old usurer and unsuccessful suitor of Madeline Bray.

Ar-thu'ri-an, 1 ar-thü'ri-an; 2 är-thû'ri-an, a. Of or pertaining to King Arthur, the real or legendary hero of British poetic story.

We . . . find in the Arthurian cycle something . . . analogous to the Tale of Troy. J. A. SYMONDS Greek Poets vol. i, p. 82. [in. 1880.]

Ar'thur's Round Table. An ancient circle 87 feet in diameter in N. Westmorland, England.

Ar'thur's Seat. A hill near Edinburgh, Scotland; 822 ft. high.

ar'ti-ad, 1 är'ti-ad; 2 är'ti-ăd, n. 1. Chem. An element or radical having an even valence, as a diad or a hexad: used also attributively; as, an artiad atom. Compare PERISSAD. 2. Zool. An artiodactyl quadruped. [< Gr. artios, even.]

Edible Head of the common Artichoke.
1. The head as cut from the plant. 2. Sectional view of the head with the outer scales removed.

Ar"ti-bo-ni'te, 1 är'ti-bo-nī'tē; 2 är'ti-bo-nī"te, n. A river, the largest in Haiti.

ar'ti-choke, 1 är'ti-chōk; 2 är'ti-chōk, n. 1. A thistle-like plant (Cynara scolymus) of the aster family, probably a native of southern Europe, but now widely cultivated. The fleshy bases of the scales on its globular head, together with the receptacle, are edible while immature.

The wild artichoke,
Which putteth forth brave branches in the Spring.
EDWIN ARNOLD Light of the World bk. iv, p. 171. [P. & W. 1891.]

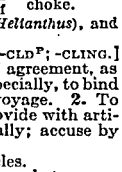
2. The Jerusalem artichoke or its edible tubers. 3. A sedge-like plant (Astelia alpina) of the lily family (Liliaceæ), with edible leaves, growing on the coast sand-hills of Tasmania. [< It. articiocco, < Ar. al-kharshūf, < al, the, + kharshūf, artichoke.]— Chinese or Japanese artichoke, the slender, white, knotty, crisp, edible tubers, 2 to 3 inches long, of an erect, hairy, Chinese or Japanese herb, (Stachys sieboldi) of the mint family, 10 to 18 inches high, eaten raw or cooked.— globe'ar"ti-choke, n. Same as ARTICHOKE, 1.— Jerusalem a., a tall plant (Helianthus tuberosus) of the aster family, of northeastern North America. Jerusalem is a corruption of the Italian girasol, meaning a sunflower (Helianthus), and has no connection with Jerusalem.



Edible Tubers of the Jerusalem Artichoke.

ar'ti-cle, 1 ä'ti-kl; 2 är'ti-cl, v. [-CLED, -CLD"; -CLING.]

ar'ti-cl", I. t. 1. To bind by articles of agreement, as to an attorney for instruction in law; especially, to bind to service; as, to article a seaman for a voyage. 2. To set forth in articles; specify. 3. To provide with articles, as of faith. 4. To charge specifically; accuse by formal articles.

II. i. To compact or covenant in articles.

ar'ti-cle, n. 1. A particular object or substance; a material thing or class of things; as, an article of food. 2. A brief composition, as in a serial publication; an essay; a paper; as, an article in the morning daily.

The performance that first brought him [Macaulay] conspicuously into notice was his article on Milton.
W. MINTO Manual of Eng. Lit. pt. i, p. 78. [W. B. 1881.]

3. A definite division; head; clause; a distinct proposition, statement, or stipulation, in a series of such, as in a constitution, an impeachment, a treaty, etc.

One of the Parliament's solemn articles of remonstrance against the King [Charles I.] was: 'His sending to destroy the Protestants of Rochelle.' LORIMER Prot. Ch. of France p. 84. [P. N. P. 1842.]

4. A complete item of religious belief; a point of doctrine, especially when forming a part of a statement of religious beliefs; as, the Thirty-nine Articles.

Articles, too, . . . lose much of their historical value by the treatment they receive from subsequent schools.
MÜLLER Chips vol. i, pref., p. 15. [S. 1874.]

5. Gram. One of a class of limiting adjectives. See under ADJECTIVE. In English a and an are the indefinite articles, and the the definite article. See A, AN, and THE.

The definite article is ordinarily required before a present participle used as a verbal noun and followed by of. Not, "It is drawing of a new constitution that startles us," but "It is the drawing of a new constitution," etc. Two or more words connected by and referring to different things should each have the article; when they denote the same thing, the article is commonly used with the first only; as, "Christ, the prophet, priest, and king." If we say "The sculptor and the painter should understand anatomy," we imply that the arts of sculpture and of painting are the province of different persons; but we say "Michelangelo, the sculptor and painter," since Michelangelo was both sculptor and painter. "The black-and-white horse" would denote one horse marked with the two shades black and white. "The black and the white horse" would denote two horses, one black and the other white.

6. Bot. A part between two joints. 7. Zool. One segment of a jointed appendage; a jointed part. 8. A definite part, as of a system; matter; item; point.

To depart in the minutest article from the niceness and strictness of a punctilio is as dangerous to national honor as to female virtue. JUNIUS Letters vol. ii, p. 63. [P. M. 1851.]

9. [Archaic.] A point of time; moment; exact instant: rare except in the phrase the article of death. [F., < L. articulus, dim. of artus, joint.]

—articles approbatory or improbative (Scots Law), that part of the process homologous to the answer to the charge in an English bill in chancery.— a. of association (Law), a written agreement defining the rights, powers, and duties of the governing body of an association as between such body and the association at large. Specif.: (1) [Eng.] Such articles which with the memorandum of association constitute the title-deeds of a limited liability company and prescribe the necessary regulations. (2) [U. S.] Such articles duly completed and filed as a charter under the laws of incorporation.— A. of Confederation, the compact drafted in 1776 by John Dickinson, by which the thirteen North-American colonies formed a league; ratified by 11 States in 1778, by Delaware in 1779, and by Maryland March 1, 1781, it remained in force until the Constitution was adopted in 1789.— a. of impeachment, the accusation in an impeachment trial.— A. of Perth, five articles agreed on at the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, Aug. 25, 1618, and ratified by Parliament on Black Saturday, Aug. 4, 1621. They were highly obnoxious to the Presbyterians.— a. of roup (Scots Law), the conditions governing the sale by auction of property.— a. of set (Scots Law), an agreement of let or lease.— a. of the peace. Law. 1. A bond by which a person in default of a specified sum binds himself to appear in court upon a certain day and in the mean time preserve the peace. BLACKSTONE Commentaries bk. iv, ch. 18. 2. A complaint made to require a person from whom injury is apprehended to find sureties for his observance of the peace.— a. of war, the code of regulations for the government of the army and navy of the United States, first enacted in 1806. In Great Britain these regulations are embodied in (1) the Army Act of 1881, which superseded those formerly incorporated in the annual Mutiny Act, and (2) the Naval Discipline Acts of 1866 and 1884, termed specifically a. of the navy.— Schmalcald A., one of the confessional formulas of the Lutheran Church, drawn up by Luther in 1537 at the instance of the Elector and signed by the Protestant powers at Schmalcald as their response to the call of Pope Paul III. for a general council at Mantua.— Schwabach A., a series of doctrinal statements drawn up by Luther and his associates and presented at a conference of evangelical princes at Schwabach, Oct. 16, 1529. The doctrinal articles of the Augsburg Confession were developed from these.— the Five A., the doctrines of Arminianism, as opposed to the Five Points of Calvinism. See ARMINIANISM.— the Forty-two A., a code of articles of the Reformed Church drawn up in 1552 by a committee of 8 bishops, 8 divines, 8 civilians, and 8 lawyers, among whom were Cranmer, Ridley, Hooper, and Coverdale. The articles were based on the Thirteen A. of the Augsburg Confession and were published in 1553; revised by Archbishop Parker in 1559, they were adopted by convocation in Jan., 1562, as the Thirty-eight A.; revised once more in 1571, a 39th article was added, and in 1682 an English edition was published by royal authority. They were adopted in Ireland in 1635 and by the Episcopal Church in Scotland at the close of the 18th century; with slight modifications they were adopted by the Protestant Episcopal Church of America, Sept. 12, 1801. The Latin MS. of the articles of 1562 and the Latin and English MSS. of 1571 are kept in Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, England.— the Lambeth A., nine articles drawn at Lambeth, England, 1595, embodying Calvinism, but never adopted by any general synod.— the Six A. (Eng. Hist.), an Act of Parliament embodying "six articles for the abolishing of diversity of opinions" in religious belief, and passed June 28, 1539.— the Thirty-nine A., the thirty-nine points of doctrine formulated and promulgated by a convocation of the Church of England, held in London, 1571. See THE FORTY-TWO ARTICLES.— the Twenty-five A., the special doctrines of the Methodist Church, being the Thirty-nine Articles with omissions. They were drawn up by John Wesley, and were adopted at the Christmas Conference of 1784.— Torgau A., a series of doctrinal statements drawn up by Luther and his colleagues and presented to the Elector at Torgau, Mar., 1530. They were made the basis of the Articles on Abuses in the Augsburg Confession.

ar-tic'u-la-bl(e", a. Able to be articulated or pronounced as distinctly separate syllables.— ar-tic"u-la-bil'i-ty, n.

ar-tic'u-lar, 1 ar-tik'yu-lar; 2 är-tic'yu-lar. I. a. 1. Of or pertaining to an articulation or joint; as, the articular cartilage. 2. [Rare.] Zool. Articulate. II. n. The articulare. [< L. articularis, < articulus, joint; see ARTICLE.]— articular arteries, five small branches of the popliteal artery, supplying the knee-joint.— a. dropsy, same as HYDRARTHROSIS.— a. lamella, the solid bone furnishing a base for the articular cartilage.— ar-tic'u-lar-ly, adv. 1. In an articulate manner; articulately. 2. By articles; in detail.

Ar-tic"u-la'ta, 1 ar-tik'yu-lē'tə; 2 är-tic'yu-lā'tə, n. pl. 1. Zool. A branch or subkingdom of the animal kingdom, variously limited, originally embracing all animals with a segmented body, as arthropods and worms. 2. Conch. The Arthropomata. 3. Echin. The Arthrocrina. 4. Helminth. A section of cyclostomatous polyzoans. [Neut. pl. of L. articulatus, jointed; see ARTICULATE, a.] ar-tic'u-late, 1 ar-tik'yu-lēt; 2 är-tic'yu-lāt, v. [-LAT"ED; -LAT"ING.] I. t. 1. To utter articulately; sound in distinct syllables; pronounce.

Her lips trembled with words she could not articulate.
A. S. HARDY Wind of Destiny p. 257. [H. M. & CO. 1890.]

2. To set forth in speech; enunciate; as, to articulate a need. 3. To joint; unite articularly.

And these articulated veins through which Our heart drives blood!
E. B. BROWNING Aurora Leigh bk. v, l. 119.

II. i. 1. To utter articulate sounds. 2. To unite by articulation; unite by joints. 3†. To agree; make terms.
Syn.: see SPEAK.

ar-tic'u-late, 1 ar-tik'yu-lit; 2 är-tic'yu-lat, a. 1. Joined or divided into consecutive syllables; made into a connected series of sounds by the alternation of consonants and vowels; united to form speech: said of human speech or its sounds, as distinguished from musical tones or the cries of animals.

As more articulate . . . voices die away upon our ear, we begin to hear the whisper of trees.
A. H. K. BOYD Recreations second series, p. 216. [O. & CO. 1870.]

2. Clearly enunciated; distinct; manifest. 3. Made up of connected segments; jointed, as limbs, animals, etc. 4. Zool. Of or pertaining to the Articulata. 5. Particularized in articles; specific. 6†. Composed of tens. [< L. articulatus, pp. of articulo, divide into joints, < articulus; see ARTICLE.] ar-tic'u-lat"ed†.

ar-tic'u-late-ly, 1 ar-tik'yu-lit-li; 2 är-tic'yu-lat-ly, adv. 1. By joints. 2. By articles. 3. With articulate sounds.

ar-tic"u-la'tion, 1 ar-tik'yu-lē'shən; 2 är-tic'yu-lā'shon, n. 1. The act of articulating vocally, or the state of being so articulated; the utterance of articulate sounds; enunciation; distinct utterance or manifestation; as, the articulation of a word; articulation of a desire.

To being well heard and clearly understood, distinctness of articulation contributes more, perhaps, than mere loudness of sound.
BLAIR Rhetoric lect. xxxiii, p. 367. [H. & Z. 1854.]

2. The act of jointing together, or the state of being so jointed; any joining of separate parts or ideas, as in a rational system.

The Greek intelligence was first employed upon the articulation of its mythology. J. A. SYMONDS Greek Poets vol. i, p. 85. [H. 1880.]

3. Anat. Any form of joint; the union forming a joint, as of bones. Articulation is either (1) amphiarthrosis, (2) diarthrosis, or (3) synarthrosis. See these words, and illus. under JOINT. 4. Bot. (1) A joint or union of two parts which separate automatically, as of a leaf-stalk or flower-stalk to the stem. (2) A node. 5. That which is articulated; in grammar, an articulate sound, utterance, or syllable, especially a consonant. 6. Phon. A movement indicating the relative position of the tongue and the palate in order to produce any given sound. The exact position is known as the place of articulation.

Atloaxoid Articulation. The joint between the human axis and atlas, seen from the front. op, odontoid process; ip, transverse process; ap, articular process; art, articulation.

ar-tic"u-la'tion-ist, 1 ar-tik'yu-lē'shən-ist; 2 är-tic'yu-lā'shon-ĭst, n. One who teaches deaf-mutes to articulate. [M.] ar-tic'u-la"tor, 1 ar-tik'yu-lē'tər or -tor; 2 är-tic'yu-lā"tor, n. 1. One who articulates speech. 2. One who articulates bones, as in mounting skeletons, etc. 3. Any device to secure articulation. Specif.: (1) A dentists' apparatus to secure correct articulation in artificial teeth. (2) A device to cure stammering. (3) An attachment for a telephone, designed to render transmitted sounds perfect and uniform.

ar-tic'u-la-to-ry, 1 ar-tik'yu-lə-tō-ri; 2 är-tic'yu-la-tō-ry, a. Of or pertaining to articulation. ar-tic'u-la-tiv(e3†.

ar-tic"u-lo-kin"es-thet'ic, 1 ar-tik'yu-lō-kin"es-thet'ik; 2 är-tic'yu-lō-kin"ĕs-thĕt'ic, a. Psychol. Relating to the kinesthetic sensations induced by movements of the joints.

ar'ti-fact, 1 är'ti-fakt; 2 är'ti-făct. I. a. Artificially produced.

II. n. 1. Anything made or modified by human art.

This is shown . . . by the presence of artefacts and shells from the Pacific in old graves on the Atlantic.
D. G. BRINTON Races and Peoples lect. ii, p. 75. [N. D. C. H. 1890.]

2. Biol. In a cell or tissue, a structure or appearance which is not present in life but produced by reaction or death.— [< L. ar(t-)s, art, + facio, make.] ar'te-fact; ar"te-fac'tum†.— ar"ti-fac-ti'tious, a.

ar'ti-fex, 1 är'ti-feks; 2 är'ti-fĕks, n. [L.] [Rare.] An artificer.

ar'ti-fice, 1 är'ti-fis; 2 är'ti-fiç, n. 1. Subtle or deceptive art in contriving; trickery; strategy; as, to lure by artifice.

Where covert guile and artifice abound. COWPER Charity l. 285.

2. Any instance of cunning skill, intended usually to deceive or outwit; a stratagem; an ingenious contrivance.

He [Korah] accused Moses of having, by various artifices, fraudulently obtained the government, and depr'ved the people of their liberties. B. FRANKLIN Essays vol. ii, p. 144. [BAR. 1822.]

3†. Any artificial product; art; workmanship. [F., < L. artificium, < ar(t-)s, art, + facio, make.]

Syn.: art, blind, cheat, contrivance, craft, cunning, dodge, finesse, fraud, imposture, machination, maneuver, ruse, stratagem, subterfuge, trick, wile. Contrivance may be either good or bad. A cheat is a mean advantage in a bargain; a fraud, any form of covert robbery or injury. Imposture is a deceitful contrivance for securing charity, credit, or consideration. A stratagem or maneuver may be of the good against the bad, as it were a skilful movement of war. A wile is usually but not necessarily evil.

GOLDSMITH Deserted Village l. 184.

A trick is often low, injurious, and malicious; we say a mean trick; the word is sometimes used playfully with less than its full meaning. A ruse or a blind may be quite innocent and harmless. An artifice is a carefully and delicately prepared contrivance for doing indirectly what one could not well do directly. A device is something studied out for promoting an end, as in a mechanism; the word is used of indirect action, often, but not necessarily directed to an evil, selfish, or injurious end. Finesse is especially subtle contrivance, delicate artifice, whether for good or evil. See FRAUD.— Ant.: artlessness, candor, fairness, frankness, guilelessness, honesty, ingenuousness, innocence, simplicity, sincerity, truth.

ar-tif'i-cer, 1 ar-tif'i-sər; 2 är-tif'i-çer, n. 1. One who constructs, esp. with art and skill; a handicraftsman; mechanic. 2. A skilful designer; an inventor; esp., a crafty person; a contriver. 3. A military mechanic, such as a carpenter, blacksmith, or mason; also, one who works in an artillery laboratory, preparing shells, fuses, grenades, etc. 4†. One who uses artifices. The invention of artificial light has extended the available term of his life. DRAPER Intell. Devel. Europe vol. i, p. 27. [H.]

2. Produced by art to imitate nature, from different materials and with an inferior result; imitation; as, artificial flowers; artificial diamonds (as paste or quartz). 3. Imitating or aping nature; lacking genuineness or reality; affected; as, artificial manners.

The whole structure of society is so artificial, that to a child it is a perpetual mystery.

LYDIA H. SIGOURNEY Letters to Mothers letter iv, p. 39. [H. 1842.]

4. Based on accidental or prominent and easily observed features rather than on essential characteristics or properties: opposed to natural; as, the artificial system in botany. See LINNEAN.

In addition to other meanings, artificial once signified, 'devised with skill,' 'ingenious.' HALL Mod. Eng. ch. 6, p. 166. [S. 1873.]

That was 'artificial' once which wrought, or which was wrought, according to the true principles of art.

TRENCH Select Glossary p. 12. [E. P. & CO. 1890.]

5†. Given to artifice; crafty. The best artist is not the one who fixes his eye on posterity, but the one who loves the practice of his art.

R. L. STEVENSON Virginibus Puerisque p. 201. [S. 1889.]

2. One who in any department does his work according to the constructive principles of art, or works artistically; as, the literary artist; an artist in elocution.

I find it asserted on all hands that a poet must be a greater artist for . . . picturing life as it is, not as it ought to be.

HUTTON Essays, Goethe in vol. ii, p. 34. [MACM. 1880.]

The artist is . . . a person who has submitted [in his work] to a law which it was painful to obey.

RUSKIN Fors Clavigera vol. iii, letter lix, p. 58. [L. B. A. 1885.]

3. [Colloq.] One skilled in any trade or business.

Artist has been beaten out so thin that it covers almost the whole field of human endeavor. . . . A cook is an artist; so is a barber; and Goldsmith soberly calls a cobbler an artist.

R. G. WHITE Words and their Uses ch. 5, p. 93. [SH. & CO.]

4. An actor. 5†. An artizan. 6†. One who uses artifice. 7†. An adept in the faculty of arts. [< F. artiste, < LL. artista, < L. ar(t-)s, art.]

Syn.: artificer, artizan. Artist, artificer, and artizan are all from the root of art, but artist holds to the esthetic sense, while artificer and artizan follow the mechanical or industrial sense of the word (see ART, under SCIENCE). Artist thus comes only into accidental association with the other words of this group, not being a synonym of any one of them and having practically no synonym of its own. The work of the artist is creative; that of the artizan mechanical. The man who paints a beautiful picture is an artist; the man who makes pin-heads all day is an artizan. The artificer is between the two, putting more thought, intelligence, and taste into his work than the artizan, but less of the idealizing, creative power than the artist. The sculptor, shaping his model in clay, is artificer as well as artist; patient artizans, working simply by rule and scale, chisel and polish the stone. See ARTIZAN.— art'ist-dom, n. The realm or condition of artists.— art'ist-like", a. & adv. Befitting an artist; artistically. art'ist-ly†.— art'ist-ry, n. 1. The pursuits of the artist. 2. The artistic quality of genius.

ar"tĭste', 1 ar"tĭst'; 2 är"tĭst', n. [F.] 1. A professional performer, as a dancer, singer, or the like, who appeals to the esthetic nature. 2. One who seeks to make a fine art of his work, as an artistic hair-dresser or a chef. Used sometimes in English as the feminine of artist.

ar-tĭs'tĭ-cal, }

1. Of or pertaining to art or artists. 2. Characterized by the appearance or effect of art; conformable to the principles of art; correctly and tastefully executed; appealing to the esthetic nature. 3. Tending or having the power to produce works of art; esthetically constructive.

Man is an artistic animal in a very special sense.

W. S. LILLY On Right and Wrong p. 222. [C. & H. 1890.]

— ar-tĭs'tĭ-cal-ly, adv. In an artistic manner; from an artistic point of view; tastefully.

Ar'yan, 1 ār'yan or ar'ı-ən; 2 är'yan or ăr'y-an, a. Of or pertaining to the Aryans or their language.

The term was formerly used by some philologists as synonymous with Indo-European or Indo-Germanic, but is now restricted to the Eastern branch of the Indo-European family. Discoveries made in 1908, in the land of the Hittites, go to show that the Aryans of India are descended from the Aryans of Cappadocia, and some philologists incline to the opinion that Europe was the cradle of this primitive race. The more prevalent use of the word Aryan is to denote the language of the Indo-European family but not the family itself. The term is also sometimes loosely used as synonymous with Japhetic.

The whole framework of grammar . . . had become settled before the separation of the Aryan family.

According to Tobit iii, 8, vi. 14 the evil spirit Asmodeus — 'King of the Demons,' in the Hebrew and Chaldaic versions, is a later addition — fell in love with Sarah, the daughter of Raguel, and prevented her from having a husband. After killing seven men successively on the nights of their marriage to her he was rendered harmless when Tobias married her, following the instructions given him by the angel Raphael. Asmodeus 'fled into the utmost parts of Egypt and the angel [Raphael] bound him' (ib. iii. 8, vi. 14 et seq., viii. 2–4). Akin to this representation in Tobit is the description of Asmodeus in the Testament of Solomon: 'I am called Asmodeus among mortals, and my business is to plot against the newly wedded, so that they may not know one another. And I sever them utterly by many calamities; and I waste away the beauty of virgins and estrange their hearts. . . . I transport men into fits of madness and desire when they have wives of their own, so that they leave them and go off by night and day to others that belong to other men; with the result that they commit sin and fall into murderous deeds.' In the Testament of Solomon, Asmodeus is connected on the one hand with the Asmodeus of Tobit, and possesses on the other many points of contact with the Ashmedai of rabbinical literature, especially in his relation to Solomon and the building of the Temple. The Jewish Encyc. vol. ii, pp. 217, 218.

3. [A-] [U. S.] The second house of some of the State legislatures. 4. Mil. An assemble. 5†. Any collection of objects. [< F. assemblée, < OF. assembler; see ASSEMBLE[1].] as-sem'ble†.

Syn.: assemblage, collection, company, conclave, concourse, conference, congregation, convention, convocation, crowd, gathering, group, host, meeting, multitude. An assemblage may be of persons or of objects; an assembly is always of persons. An assemblage is promiscuous and unorganized; an assembly is organized and united in some common purpose. A conclave is a secret assembly. A convocation is an assembly called by authority for a special purpose; the term convention suggests less dependence upon any superior authority or summons. Collection, crowd, gathering, group, and multitude have the unorganized and promiscuous character of the assemblage; the other terms come under the general idea of assembly.— Ant.: dispersion, loneliness, privacy, retirement, seclusion.

— Assembly of Notables, see NOTABLE, n., 2.— as-sem'bly-room", n. A room in which assemblies are held.— General A. [U. as-sent', 1 ə-sent'; 2 ă-sĕnt', v. I. i. 1. To express agreement with a statement or matter of opinion; declare belief in a proposition or measure: followed by to.

Much truth had been assented to in Time,
Which never, till this day, had made a due Impression on the heart. POLLOK Course of Time bk. ix, l. 712.

Let our determination never to assent reach Rome. O'CONNELL Speeches, Meeting at Lord Fingal's in vol. i, p. 447. [JAS. D.]

2. Finance. To agree to a proposed change, as of amount, character, status, etc.: said of bonds or stocks subject to such conditions when deposited.

II†. t. To agree to; determine. [< OF. assenter, F. assentir, < LL. assentor, irreg. freq. of assentior, < ad, to, + sentio, feel.]

Syn.: accede, accept, accord, acquiesce, admit, agree, approve, chime in, coincide, concur, consent, ratify, subscribe to, sustain, uphold. To assent is an act of the understanding; to consent, of the will. We may concur or agree with others, either in opinion or decision. "We may consent to what does not please us, but we can not assent to what we do not believe. We refuse what we do not consent to do; we deny what we do not assent to. Consent is used in an active, assent in a passive sense." GRAHAM English Synonymes. One may silently acquiesce in that which does not meet his views, but which he does not care to contest. He admits the charge brought, or the statement made, by another — admit always carrying a suggestion of reluctance. We approve or ratify the act of an agent or subordinate. Assent is sometimes used for a mild form of consent, as if agreement in the opinion assured approval of the decision.— Ant.: contradict, demur, deny, differ, disagree, disavow, disclaim, dissent, object, protest, question, refuse, repudiate.— Prep.: to.— as"sen-ta'ne-ous, a. [Rare.] Inclined to assent. I. a. Assenting. II. n. One who assents.— as-sent'er, n. One who assents or acquiesces.— as-sen'tiv(e-ness[e], a. [Rare.] Ready or inclined to assent; compliant.— as-sen'tiv(e-ness[e], a.

as-sent', 1 ə-sent'; 2 ă-sĕnt', n. 1. Mental concurrence or expression of concurrence in a proposition; agreement; acquiescence; in theology, the intellectual element in faith; approval; sanction.

Faith, in the widest sense of the word, is assent to the truth.
C. HODGE Systematic Theology vol. iii, p. 42. [S. 1873.]

2. The giving of consent, approval, or sanction, especially as a decision of will, as in an official or judicial act.

The Lower House refused its assent to a statute.
GREEN Hist. Eng. People vol. ii, p. 396. [H. 1880.]

3†. Opinion. as-sent'ment† [Archaic]. Syn.: see APPROBATION.— royal assent [Eng.], the formal assent of the sovereign to a legislative act passed by the two houses of Parliament: corresponding to the President's approval of an act of Congress in the United States.

as"sen-ta'tion, 1 as'en-tē'shən; 2 ăs'ĕn-tā'shon, n. The act of assenting, esp. in obsequious compliance.

ERSKINE Speeches, Defence of Paine p. 233. [B. & T. 1880.]

3†. To set at liberty. 4†. To uphold; defend. [< L. assertus, pp. of assero, join to, + ad, to, < sero, bind.]

SYN.: affirm, allege, asseverate, aver, avouch, avow, claim, declare, maintain, pronounce, protest, say, state, tell. One may assert himself, or assert his right to what he is willing to contend for; or he may assert in discussion what he is ready to maintain by argument or evidence. To assert without proof is always to lay oneself open to the suspicion of having no proof to offer, and seems to arrogate too much to one's personal authority, and hence in such cases both the verb assert and its noun assertion have an unfavorable sense; we say a mere assertion, a bare assertion, his unsupported assertion; he asserted his innocence has less force than he affirmed or maintained his innocence. Assert has always a controversial sense, resisting or challenging opposition; affirm, state, and tell are simply declarative. To vindicate is to defend successfully what is assailed. Almost every criminal will assert his innocence; the honest man will seldom lack means to vindicate his integrity. See AFFIRM; ALLEGE; ASSURE; AVER.— ANT.: contradict, contravene, controvert, deny, disprove, dispute, gainsay, oppose, repudiate, retract, waive.— to assert oneself, to put forward and defend one's own claim, authority, or right.— as-sert'a-bl(eR, as-sert'i-bl(eR, a.— as-sert'er, as-sert'or, n.— as-sert'ress, n.

as-ser'tion, 1 a-sûr'shąn; 2 ă-sẽr'shon, n. 1. The act of asserting; a positive or definite statement or affirmation concerning some particular thing, advanced without accompanying proof; declaration.

[This] would need some better proof than bare assertion to make it be believed. HAMILTON Metaphysics p. 220. [G. & L. 1859.]

2. That which is asserted; a positive declaration, especially when unsupported.

We have seen strong assertions without proof.

JUNIUS Letters vol. i, p. 33. [B. M. 1851.]

3. The act of maintaining a cause or principle; insistence upon a right or claim. 4†. Liberation. as"ser-ta'tion†. SYN.: see ASSURANCE. Compare synonyms for ASSERT.— as-ser'tion-al, a.

as-ser'tive, 1 a-sûr'tiv; 2 ă-sẽr'tiv, a. Asserting or inclined to assert; confident in statement; dogmatic; positive. [< L. assertus; see ASSERT.] as-sert'a-tiv(es†.— as-ser'tiv(e-lyS, adv.— as-ser'tiv(e-nessS, n.

as"ser-to'ri-al, 1 as"ęr-tō'ri-al; 2 ăs"er-tō'ri-al, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of assertion. 2. Logic. (1) Affirming the reality of a thing as a fact; asserting that something is: distinguished from problematical and apodictical. (2) Asserting that a thing is known by the asserter to be true. See quotation under ASSERTORY. as"ser-tor'ic or -i-cal‡.— as"ser-to'ri-al-ly or -tor'i-cal-ly, as"ser-to'ri-ly†, adv.

as-ser'to-ry, 1 a-sûr'to-ri; 2 ă-sẽr'to-ry, a. 1. Of the nature of, pertaining to, or characterized by assertion; affirmative; declaratory. 2. Assertorial; as, an assertory proposition, that is, one which asserts a fact but not its necessity. [< LL. assertorius, < L. assero; see ASSERT.]

Assertory judgments are true and certain subjectively, but not objectively; i. e., sure to him who holds them, but incapable of being enforced on the acceptance of others of a different moral disposition. L. H. ATWATER Elementary Logic p. 193. [L. 1867.]

— assertory oath, see under OATH.

2. In life insurance, the funds controlled or invested by a company in other forms than the future premiums secured to it by certain conditions named within its policies. 3. Property in general, regarded as applicable to the payment of debts. [< F. assez, < LL. ad satis, to sufficiency, < L. ad, to, + satis, enough.]

— admitted assets, the assets remaining after deducting all amounts excluded by the insurance companies. net assets†.— a. by descent, property in lands which descend to an heir charged with an obligation of the deceased ancestor, which the heir is bound to discharge from such property.— a. in hand (Law), the assets assigned to the executor or trustee of an estate to meet all claims against him in this capacity. a. entre mains.— equitable a. (Law), all assets that are chargeable with the payment of debts or legacies in equity and which do not fall under the head of legal assets; specif., those portions of the property which usually are exempt by law from debts but which have been voluntarily charged as assets by the testator, or which, having no existence in law, have been created in equity. In the United States the doctrine of equitable assets has been much restricted by statute, and in England, since the act of 1870, which provides that creditors are payable part passu out of both legal and equitable assets, it has lost its importance.— liquid a. (Finance), such securities and assets as can be realized immediately.— personal a., the personal property of all kinds belonging to a bankrupt, insolvent, or deceased person's estate, and distributable to creditors or heirs.— real a., any landed property belonging to the estate of a bankrupt or a deceased person, subject to the payment of debts by due administration of law.

as-sev'er-ate, 1 a-sev'ər-ēt; 2 ă-sĕv'er-āt, vt. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] To affirm or aver positively or with solemnity; assert or declare positively or emphatically; aver; avouch. [< L. asseveratus, pp. of asservo, < ad, to, + severus, serious.] as-sev'er†. SYN.: see AFFIRM; ALLEGE; ASSERT; ASSURE.

ass'head", ass'head"ed†, n. [Archaic.] A person of low mental capacity; a dolt; blockhead.— ass'head"ed†, a.

As'shur, 1 ash'ur; 2 ăsh'ûr, n. Myth. The highest god of the Assyrians, supposedly their deified patriarch mentioned in Gen. x, 11. As'sur†.

Symbol of the Assyrian God Asshur, frequently found on seal-cylinders and on Assyrian monuments.

The chief of the Assyrian pantheon, not found in the pantheon of Babylonia, was Asshur. His derivation and origin are obscure, though there is some plausibility in the suggestion that he was ultimately derived from Anu, the heaven-god of Babylonia. . . . The significance of Asshur is that he stands for nationalism. . . . His symbol or representation was not an image, but a winged disk surmounted by the figure of an archer discharging his shaft. Sayce was the first to point out that in this deity and the conceptions about him there was the possibility of all the greatness of a monotheism such as developed in the conception of Yahweh. GEORGE W. GILMORE in New Schaff-Herzog Encyc. i, p. 333. [F. & W. CO. '08.]

Originally like Marduk, a solar deity with the winged disk, Assur becomes as Assyria develops into a military power a god of war, indicated by the attachment of the figure of a man with a bow to the winged disk. Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. ii, p. 788.

As-shu'rim, 1 a-shū'rim; 2 ă-shu'rim, n. pl. Bib. Gen. xxv, 3.

as-sib"i-la'tion, 1 a-sib'i-lē'shąn; 2 ă-sĭb"i-lā'shon, n. Philol. The process of changing a mute into a sibilant, as t into ts (Italian z) or into sh (as in nation): usually due to the influence of a following e, i, or y sound.

As"si-de'an, 1 as'i-dī'ąn; 2 ăs'i-dē'an, n. 1. One of a sect of Jews zealous for the law, the so-called "pious ones" (1 Mac. ii, 42), from whom sprang the Essenes and Pharisees. 2. See CHASIDIM: an improper form. [< Gr. Asidaioi, < Heb. hasidim, < hāsad, be pious.]

as'si-dent, 1 as'i-dent; 2 ăs'i-dĕnt, a. Pathol. Usually accompanying; concomitant: opposed to pathognomonic: said of symptoms in disease. [< L. assident(i-)s, ppr. of assideo; see ASSESS.]

as-sid"er-a'tion, 1 a-sid"ər-ē'shąn; 2 ă-sĭd"er-ā'shon, n. Med. Law. Immersion in ice-cold water to cause death and at the same time conceal the manner in which it was effected: a form of infanticide. [< L. ad, to, + sideror, palsy, numb.]

as"si-du'i-ty, 1 as'i-diū'i-ti; 2 ăs'i-dū'i-ty, n. [-TIES, 1-tiz; 2-tiș, pl.] 1. Close and continuous application or effort; zeal; assiduousness.

The rovers of the wilderness, though unused to enterprises requiring time and assiduity, blockaded the place closely.

BANCROFT United States vol. iii, p. 43. [A. 1883.]

2. Faithful personal attention; carefulness; watchfulness; as, the assiduity of that faithful guardian.

It is the attention and assiduity of the women that prevent men from degenerating into swine. B. FRANKLIN Essays, Answer to American Whitewashing p. 274. [L. & CO. 1851.]

3†. Servility. [< L. assiduitas, < assiduus; see ASSIDUOUS.]

SYN.: application, attention, constancy, diligence, effort, exertion, industry, intentness, labor, pains, patience, perseverance, persistence, sedulousness, watchfulness. Assiduity (as the etymology suggests) sits down to a task until it is done. Diligence invests mere effort and exertion with love of the work or deep interest in its accomplishment; application concentrates all one's powers upon it with utmost intensity; hence, application can hardly be as continuous and enduring as assiduity. Constancy is a steady devotion of heart and principle. Patience works on in spite of annoyances; perseverance overcomes hindrances and difficulties; persistence strives relentlessly against opposition. Industry is diligence in some vocation, business, or profession. Labor and pains refer to the exertions of the worker and the tax upon him, while assiduity, perseverance, etc., refer to his continuance in the work.— ANT.: changeableness, fickleness, idleness, inattention, inconstancy, indolence, neglect, negligence, remissness.

as-sid'u-ous, 1 a-sid'yu-ųs; 2 ă-sĭd'yu-ŭs, a. 1. Devoted or constant, as in pursuit or attendance; having zealous and watchful regard or care; unremitting; diligent; careful.

To catch dame Fortune's golden smile, Assiduous wait upon her.

BURNS Epistle to a Young Friend st. 7.

2. Long and faithfully continued, pursued, or sustained; persistent; unremitting; constant.

These hollows were no doubt once very fruitful by assiduous cultivation. C. D. WARNER In the Levant p. 118. [O. & CO. 1877.]

3†. Frequent. [< L. assiduus, < assideo; see ASSESS.] — as-sid'u-ous-ly, adv. With close or constant application; diligently; regularly.— as-sid'u-ous-ness, n. The quality of being assiduous; assiduity.

as"si-en'to, 1 ăs'ı-en'to; 2 ăs'i-ĕn'to, n. A contract between Spain and a foreign country, or a company of foreign merchants, granting exclusive privileges for supplying the Spanish-American colonies with negro slaves. The last one was surrendered by England, Oct. 5, 1750, on payment of half a million dollars. [Sp., < asentar, agree, < L. ad, to, + sedeo, sit.] as"i-en'to†.

as"si-ette', 1 a"sı-et'; 2 ă"si-ĕt', n. [F.] Bookbinding. A compound of bole, bloodstone, and galena, used as a gilding-surface.

as'si-fy, 1 as'ı-fai; 2 ăs'i-fy, vt. [-FIED; -FY'ING.] [Humorous.] To make an ass or fool of. [< ASS[1] + I-FY.]

as-sign', 1 a-sain'; 2 ă-sīn', v. I. t. 1. To set apart for a particular use, duty, or station; designate; appoint; apportion; allot; as, to assign a day for a hearing in court.

I was not assigned to the position of department commander until the 25th of October, 1862.

U. S. GRANT Personal Memoirs vol. i, p. 393. [C. L. W. 1885.]

2. To point out with precision; particularize; specify; determine; set; as, to assign errors in a judicial record.

God is infinite in being because no limit can be assigned to his perfections. C. HODGE System. Theol. vol. i, p. 383. [S. 1885.]

3. To account for with reasons; ascribe; attribute; as, to assign odd behavior to ill health. 4. Law. (1) To transfer ownership of in writing; make over to another, as a bond and mortgage, or shares or stock. (2) To surrender to an assignee for the benefit of creditors, as in bankruptcy or insolvency.

II. i. Law. To make an assignment, as for the benefit of creditors. [< OF. assigner, < L. assigno, < ad, to, + signum, mark.]

SYN.: see ALLEGE; ALLOT; APPORTION; ATTRIBUTE; AWARD.— PREP.: assign to a person, for a purpose.— to assign in blank, to transfer stock without writing the name of the person to whom the transfer is made in the place provided for it.

as-sign', n. 1. Law. A person to whom property, rights, or powers are transferred by another; as, heirs and assigns in a grant by deed. Compare ASSIGNEE.

Assign differs from assignee in that the latter is personally designated and holds immediately from his assignor; while the former, tho individually undesignated and however remote, may hold under the original grantor.

2†. An appurtenance; belonging.

as-sign'a-ble, 1 a-sain'ą-bl; 2 ă-sīn'a-bl, a. 1. Capable as-sign'a-blH, of being assigned, specified, or allotted; as, infinity is greater than any assignable quantity.

2. Law. (1) Transferable by assignment; negotiable; as, an assignable contract. (2) Attributable; predicable; as, perjury is not assignable of statements under illegal oath. — as-sign"a-bil'i-ty, n.— as-sign'a-bly, adv.

as'sig-nat, 1 as'ıg-nat or (F.) a"sı'nyā'; 2 ăs'ig-năt or (F.) ă'sı"nyā', n. 1. F. Hist. A promissory note of the French revolutionary government circulating as currency (1789–1796), secured by confiscated church lands, the national domain, and the estates of emigrés. These assignats were inconvertible except in payment for public land. In 1789 they bore interest at 5 per cent., which was lowered to 3 per cent. in 1790. By 1796 the issue of assignats had reached the enormous total of 45[1]/[2] billion francs exclusive of forgeries, while their value was but 30 to 1 of coin. At this value they were converted into 800 million francs' worth of land-warrants or mandats territoriaux, constituting a mortgage on all public lands. These mandats were unsuccessful and were finally redeemed by the state at one-seventieth of their face value. Encyc. Brit. 11th ed., vol. ii, p. 781.

2. [Rare.] F. Law. The assignment of an annuity as a rent-charge on an estate. [F., < L. assignatus, pp. of assigno; see ASSIGN, v.]

Circumstances are the nutriment of character, the food which it converts into blood; and this process of assimilation presupposes individual power to act upon circumstances.
E. P. WHIPPLE Character p. 6. [T. & F. 1866.]

2. Physiol. The transformation of digested nutriment into an integral and homogeneous part of the solids or fluids of the organism, the last of the processes of nutrition, following digestion and absorption: strictly a form of constructive metabolism; specifically, in botany, the starch-making function of plants. Compare METABOLISM.

Assimilation . . . the power of an existing organized particle to impart its own organization to an adjoining particle having the proper chemical constitution. BAIN Logic p. 491. [A. 1874.]

3. Philol. The change or modification of a letter to cause it to approach a neighboring one in sound, as in correction, from correctio. 4. Psychol. The process by which all new contents, when received into consciousness, are modified so as to be incorporated with the results of previous conscious processes. In its most general use, assimilation may include fusion, or looser and more intimate association, or conscious recognition. Its use by Wundt is more restricted.

Simultaneous associations made up of elements from different psychical compounds may be divided into two classes: into assimilations, or associations between elements of like compounds, and complications, or associations between elements of unlike compounds. WUNDT Outlines of Psychol. trans., p. 227.

— primary assimilation (Physiol.), the process whereby the lacteals absorb chyle.— progressive a. (Philol.), the assimilation of a sound to one coming before it, so as almost to merge into it.

(1166) modifying the administration of the criminal law and determining the procedure of itinerant judges.— A. of Jerusalem, two codes of laws erroneously ascribed to Godfrey de Bouillon, king of Jerusalem, 1099, and consisting of (1) Assize of the High Court, (2) Assize of the Court of Burgesses; in force in the Latin kingdoms of Jerusalem and Cyprus.— A. of Northampton, an ordinance, enforcing the Assize of Clarendon, issued at Northampton, England, by Henry II., Jan., 1176.— general a. [Eng.], an assize held under a commission to try all cases; also, anciently, the English Parliament, as the supreme legislative and judicial body of the realm.— grand a. (Eng. Hist.), a trial by a jury of sixteen persons that took the place of a trial by battle. — great a. 1. The Last Judgment. 2. The court of Judge Sewall, of Massachusetts, which condemned women for witchcraft in 1692. 3. Same as GRAND ASSIZE.— malden a. [Eng.], a session of court for the trial of criminal cases when no criminal is found held for arraignment.

as-siz'er, 1 a-saiz'er; 2 ă-sīz'er, n. 1. One of a grand assize. 2. [Scot.] A juror. 3†. One who rated or valued, as measures or prices. as-sis'er‡; as-siz'or‡.

Assoc. Sc., abbr. Associate in Science.

as-so"cia-bil'i-ty, 1 ə-sō"shə-bil'ı-tı; 2 ă-sō"sha-bĭl'ı-ty, n. The state or quality of being associable. as-so'cia-ble-ness‡.

as-so'cia-ble, } 1 ə-sō'shə-bl; 2 ă-sō'sha-bl, a. 1. Ca-as-so'cia-bl", } pable of being associated or brought into association. 2. Pathol. Liable to be affected by sympathy with other parts. 3. [Rare.] Sociable. [< L. associatus; see ASSOCIATE, v.] as-so'ci-ate, 1 ə-sō'shı-ēt; 2 ă-sō'shi-āt, v. [-AT'ED; -AT'ING.] I. t. 1. To bring, place, or link together, as in action, fellowship, position, condition, or purpose; bind together by certain formalities, as for a common purpose; join in company; bring into association; make an associate or partner; connect; unite; combine; ally. 2. To connect together in thought; think of in connection; especially in psychology, to link together in thought under the principles of association. See ASSOCIATION OF IDEAS, under ASSOCIATION.

Correggio, . . . that great master, whose name is associated in every one's mind with all that is gentle or delicate in the imitation of nature. A. ALISON, SR. Essays, Lourre in 1814 p. 112. [A. 1874.]

The sight of a dog associates the image of its owner, because I have seen the two together; and the sound of the word 'stop' associates the image of its frequent companion-word 'thief.' M. W. CALKINS Introduction to Psychology, pp. 161, 162. [MACM.'01.]

3†. To consort with; make an associate of; accompany.

II. i. To keep or to be in company; be in contiguity or some special relation; have fellowship or habitual intercourse; unite for a common purpose; join in action.

As long as we live, by associating with those who speak correctly, we are shown our own faults.
WHITNEY Language p. 16. [S. 1874.]

as-so'ci-ate, a. 1. Joined together or with another or others; united; allied; existing or occurring together; concomitant: often before a title, implying coordinate or nearly coordinate powers or rank; as, an associate justice; an associate professor.

While I Descend through darkness, on your road with ease,
To my associate Powers. MILTON P. L. bk. x, l. 395.

2. Admitted or entitled to a limited or specified participation, as in rights, privileges, and doings; as, an associate member of a society. 3. Pathol. Sympathetic.

— associate antagonists, muscles that are antagonistic to each other when working separately, but which, when working together, effect a movement of the part to which they are attached.— a. movements. Physiol. 1. The coordinate movements by which a definite act is performed. The coordination is involuntary, tho the act may be voluntary. 2. Movements that sometimes occur in a paralyzed muscle when its corresponding non-paralyzed fellow is moved. associated movements‡.— a. numbers (Math.), two numbers the product of which is congruent with unity to any modulus m.

as-so'ci-ate, n. 1. One who is habitually or frequently in the company or society of another; a companion; comrade; mate. 2. One who is associated with another, as in some business, act, interest, office, or position.

CRAIK Eng. Lit. and Lang., Southey vol. ii, p. 497. [S. 1869.]

3. Anything that habitually or frequently accompanies or is associated with something else; a concomitant.

Good health, and, its associate in the most,
Good temper. COWPER Task bk. i, l. 399.

4. One admitted to partial membership in an association, society, or institution, without the privileges or rights of a full member; as, an associate of the Royal Academy. 5. In some educational institutions, one who has finished a course shorter than that set for a degree; as, an associate in arts. 6. Psychol. A mental image or idea that has been connected with another, under the so-called laws of association.

The one [idea] no sooner . . . comes into the understanding, but its associate appears with it.
LOCKE Human Understanding p. 261. [T. E. Z.]

Syn.: ally, chum, coadjutor, colleague, companion, comrade, consort, fellow, friend, helpmate, mate, partner, peer. An associate usually implies a chief, leader, or principal, to whom the associate is not fully equal in rank. Associate may be used of mere friendly relations, but oftener implies some work, enterprise, or pursuit in which the associated persons unite. We rarely speak of associates in crime or wrong, using confederates instead. Companion gives itself with equal readiness to the good or evil sense, as also does comrade. One may be a companion in travel who would not readily become an associate at home. A lady advertises for a companion; she would not advertise for an associate. Peer implies equality rather than companionship; as, a jury of his peers. Comrade expresses more fellowship and good feeling than companion. Fellow has almost gone out of use in this connection, except in an inferior or patronizing sense. Consort is a word of equality and dignity, as applied especially to the marriage relation. See ACCESSORY; FRIEND.— Ant.: antagonist, enemy, foe, hinderer, opponent, opposer, rival, stranger.— Prep.: associates of the leader in the enterprise.

as-so'ci-at"ed-ness, 1 ə-sō'shı-ēt"ed-nes; 2 ă-sō'shi-āt"ed-nĕs. n. The condition of being associated.

as-so"ci-a'tion, 1 ə-sō"sı-ē'shən; 2 ă-sō"ci-ā'shon (XIII), n. 1. The act, process, or result of associating, or the state of being associated; the condition of having combined for a common purpose.

If the United States be not a government proper, but an association of States in the nature of contract merely, can it, as a contract, be peaceably unmade by less than all the parties who made it?
LINCOLN in Johnston's Am. Orations vol. iii, p. 146. [G. P. P. 1884.]

2. Any connection or relation between objects or ideas that tends to unite them in thought; also, anything thus mentally associated. See ASSOCIATION OF IDEAS, below.

Nearly all our associations are determined by chance or necessity. RUSKIN Sesame and Lilies lect. i, p. 11. [W. & S. 1865.]

Association, so far as the word stands for an effect, is between things thought of — it is things, not ideas, which are associated in the mind.
JAMES Principles of Psychol. vol. i, p. 554. [H. H. & CO., 1896.]

3. The mental process or faculty by virtue of which objects or ideas are thus connected; associative power; specifically, in psychology, that process in reproduction in which past cognitions are brought back through connection with something present in the mind. Associations are classified as external or extrinsic association, association by contiguity; internal or intrinsic a., by resemblance; mediate a., by intermediate states which may be subconscious; simultaneous a., by a single simultaneous act; successive a., by successive stages. See LAWS OF ASSOCIATION, below.

4. A body of persons, as scholars, clergymen, etc., associated for some common purpose, especially of a public nature; as, an association for the advancement of science.

Association was first used among Congregationalists for a society consisting of a number of pastors of neighboring churches, united for promoting the interests of religion and the harmony of the churches, but claiming no ecclesiastical authority. Compare CONSOCIATION.

You cannot make an association out of insincere men.
CARLYLE Heroes and Hero-Worship lect. iv, p. 150. [C. & H. 1870.]

5. Ecol. A major division of a formation in plant geography; consocies. 6. [U. S.] An organized but unchartered body analogous to but distinguished legally from a corporation.

SYN.: alliance, club, community, companionship, company, confederacy, confederation, conjunction, connection, corporation, familiarity, federation, fellowship, fraternity, friendship, lodge, partnership, society, union. We speak of an alliance of nations, a club of pleasure-seekers, a community of Shakers, a company of soldiers or of friends, a confederacy, confederation, federation, or union of separate states under one general government, a partnership or company of business men, a conjunction of planets. The whole body of Freemasons constitute a fraternity; one of their local organizations is called a lodge. A corporation or company is formed for purposes of business; an association or society (tho also incorporated) is for learning, literature, benevolence, religion, etc. Compare synonyms for ACQUAINTANCE; ASSOCIATE; FRIENDSHIP.— ANT.: disintegration, independence, isolation, separation, solitude.— PREP.: an association of scholars for the advancement of knowledge; association with the good is ennobling.

— American Protective Association [U. S.], the official title of a secret society, formed in the State of Iowa in 1887, with the avowed purpose of protecting American institutions by endeavoring to cause the exclusion of Roman Catholics from public office: usually abbreviated A. P. A.— a. cultuelles [F.], literally, associations for worship; especially (F. Hist.), non-sectarian associations for public worship authorized by the Separation Law of Dec. 9, 1905, which empowered the associations to hold the churches and church property, the former for the total period of their existence, the latter only for a time.

GEORGE GOYAU in Catholic Encyc., vol. iv, p. 206. [R. A. & CO. '08.]

— a. fibers, fibers that unite different, but not widely separated, areas of the cerebrospinal axis on the same side, as in the brain or the spinal cord.— a. football [Gt. Brit.], the game in which all players but the goal-keepers are forbidden to handle the ball while in play; soccer. See FOOTBALL.— a. of ideas. Psychol. 1. That aspect of the process of mental reproduction which is thought to explain why present states of consciousness occur in pairs or series resembling those which have been connected in past states of consciousness.

The phrase 'association of' is fitted to mark the bare fact that complex ideas, which had a more or less independent origin, are in the habit of recurring in regular sequences (in pairs, or threes, or series of larger numbers). G. T. LADD Psychol. Descriptive and Explanatory p. 263. [S. 1894.]

2. The tendency of any conscious state or process to recall others that have previously been associated with it in consciousness. Locke, who invented this phrase, and his followers in Great Britain and France, used it as tho some active influence were exerted by the so-called ideas as such. The observed facts of the mental life are now, however, much better interpreted by a psychology which studies them as coming under the psysiological and psychical conditions of mental synthesis, the formation of habits, etc. Thus the association may be of so intimate and unanalyzable a character as to be more properly called a fusion, in which sense of the words no perception of a complex object would be possible without the association of ideas. Others would limit the term to the connection of universals in the processes of thought.— a. philosophy, see ASSOCIATIONISM. — a.-time, n. Psychophysics. The time supposed to be required for the central nervous processes connected with mental association; the time of associative reaction as distinguished from simple reaction.— laws of a., the principles that regulate the connection and recurrence of ideas in the mental processes of reproduction and representation. They include (1) the primary laws, those which hold true in every kind; and (2) the secondary laws (laws of preference), those which decide why one associated idea rather than another recurs in consciousness. Various attempts have been made to bring all cases of association of ideas under one law.

as-so″ci-a′tion-al, 1 a-sō″sı-ē′shən-əl; 2 ă-sō″çi-ā′shonal, a. Of or pertaining to association or to the theory of associationism.

as-so″ci-a′tion-ism, 1 a-sō″sı-ē′shən-izm; 2 ă-sō″çi-ā′shon-ism, n. 1. The psychological doctrine that all mental development, including the activity of the so-called higher faculties, may be explained as the product of the association of ideas under the laws of association. 2. Cooperative socialism or communism; Fourierism. as-so″ci-a′tion-al-ism†.

as-so″ci-a′tion-ist, n. One who holds or advocates associationism. as-so″ci-a′tion-al-ist†.

as-so′ci-a-tiv[s], } Resulting from or characterized by association; pertaining or tending to association; as, associative ideas, faculty, etc. 2. Math. Subject to the law that the final result of uniting three quantities, a, b, and c, by any operation (when two are first united and the third united to the result), is the same whether the first two or last two be united first; as, multiplication in ordinary arithmetic or algebra is associative because $(ab)c = a(bc)$. as-so′ci-a-to-ry†. -ly[s], adv. -ness[s], n.

as-so′ci-a″tor, 1 a-sō′shı-ē″tər or -ter; 2 ă-sō′shi-ā″tor, n. One who or that which associates or is associated; a member of an association; a companion or confederate.

as-so′cies, 1 a-sō′shīz; 2 ă-sō′shēz, n. sing. & pl. Ecol. The association of plants considered from the history of their development, as it undergoes developmental changes.

As″so-fu′dah, 1 as″o-fū′da; 2 ăs″o-fu′dä, n. A town in the Fulah country, West Africa.

as-soil′[1], 1 a-soil′; 2 ă-sŏil′, vt. 1. To set free, as from the consequences of sin; absolve; acquit; pardon.

Bartlemy Brown, whose father (God assoil him therefor!) modernized Walton. LAMB Eliana, Late Elia p. 157. [W. L. & CO.]

2. To atone for; dispel; expiate. 3†. To solve; clear up; remove. [< OF. assoiler, < L. absolvo, < ab, from, + solvo, loose, < se-, apart, + luo, loosen.] a-soyle′† [Scot.]; as-soil′zie† [Scot.].

as-soil′ŋ†, vt. [Archaic.] To soil; sully; stain.

as-soil′er, 1 a-soil′er; 2 ă-sŏil′er, n. [Archaic.] The state of being assoiled; acquittal; pardon; forgiveness.

as-soil′ment[1], 1 a-soil′ment or -mənt; 2 ă-sŏil′ment, n. 1. The act of assoiling, or the state of being assoiled, as from guilt. 2†. Reconciliation, as of that which conflicts. 3†. Discharge, as of a duty.

as-soil′ment[2], n. [Archaic.] Defilement; stain.

As″so′lant′, 1 a′sō′lăn′; 2 ä′sō′län′. Jean Baptiste Alfred (3/12 1827–3/4 1886). A French author.

As″som″moir′, L′, 1 lā′som′wär′; 2 lā′sôm′wär′, n. A novel by Émile Zola, published in 1877, exemplifying the evils of drink, in which the heroine, Gervaise, after being abandoned with her two children by her lover, Lantier, makes a brave fight to support them and herself as a washerwoman. A zinc-worker, Coupeau, persuades her to marry him. They prosper, when he is disabled by an accident. Their savings are swallowed up and Coupeau, recovering, meets Lantier, whom he brings to his home. Impelled by the knowledge that he has been the cause of the renewal of the previous relations between his wife and Lantier, Coupeau takes to drink and dies of delirium tremens. The title is a slang French term for "bludgeon," and is used figuratively for a low drinking-house. The book was dramatized and a play produced in Paris in 1879.

as′so-nance, 1 as′o-nəns; 2 ăs′o-nanç, n. 1. Resemblance or correspondence in sound; hence, resemblance or correspondence in other respects; also, its result.

Cleopas, or Chalpai, is a Hebrew name, of which Alphæus is the current assonance adopted for intercourse with the Gentile world.
FARRAR Early Days of Christianity p. 269 [E. P. D.]

2. Pros. Correspondence of the accented vowels, but not of the consonants, in riming syllables: used in Spanish and Italian poetry; also, the imperfect rime so formed, as in verses ended with roaming and floating.

In their lighter poetry the Spaniards frequently contented themselves with assonances, that is, with the correspondence of final syllables, wherein the vowel alone was the same.
HALLAM Lit. Europe vol. i, pt. i, ch. 2, p. 81. [H. 1854.]

as′so-nant, 1 as′o-nant; 2 ăs′o-nant, a. 1. Having resemblance of sound. 2. Pros. Of, pertaining to, or characterized by assonance. [F., < L. assonan(t-)s, ppr. of assono, < ad, to, + sono, < sonus, sound.] as′so-nanced†; as″so-nan′tal†; as″so-nan′tic†.

as′so-nant, n. A word similar to another in its vowel sounds, especially one forming an assonance in poetry.

as′so-nate, 1 as′o-nēt; 2 ăs′o-nāt, vi. [-NAT′ED; -NAT′ING.] To accord in sound, esp., vowel sound; to form assonance. [< L. assonatus, pp. of assono; see ASSONANT, a.]

As-so′ni-a, 1 a-sō′nı-ə; 2 ă-sō′ni-a, n. Bot. Same as DOMBEYA. [< Ignacio Jordan de Asso y del Rio, Sp. botanist.]

as-sort′, 1 a-sōrt′; 2 ă-sôrt′, v. I. t. 1. To distribute into classes or groups; arrange in order or in lots; classify.

It is only by assorting them [objects] in classes that we can reduce the infinity of nature to the finitude of mind.
HAMILTON Metaphysics lect. iv, p. 47. [G. & L. 1859.]

2. To make up of a variety; furnish with a suitable variety of things or goods; as, to assort a stock of goods.

Our cargo was an assorted one; that is, it consisted of everything under the sun.
R. H. DANA Two Years p. 85. [O. & CO. 1876.]

3. To make of the same sort; adapt.

II. i. To fall into a class or group; harmonize; also, to associate; consort; as, to assort naturally with the others. [< F. assortir, < à (< L. ad), to, + sorte, < L. sor(t-)s, lot.] SYN.: see ARRANGE.

as-sort′a-tive, } 1 a-sōrt′ə-tiv; 2 ă-sôrt′a-tĭv, a. Relating as-sort′a-tiv[s], } or tending to assortment or selection; assorting.— as-sor′tiv(es†.— assortative mating, the proclivity exhibited by individuals possessing a definite character in choosing to mate with individuals of the opposite sex possessing the same or another particular character.

as-sort′ed, 1 a-sōrt′ed; 2 ă-sôrt′ĕd, pa. Selected; containing or arranged in various sorts or kinds; also, matched; suited.— as-sort′ed-ness, n.

His men are not . . . well-assorted assemblages of qualities.
MACAULAY Essays, Dryden p. 45. [P. S. & CO. 1854.]

as-sort′ment, 1 a-sōrt′ment or -mənt; 2 ă-sôrt′ment, n. 1. The act or process of assorting; classification.

The mere ticketing and orderly assortment of external facts is constantly spoken of as if it were in the nature of Explanation.
DUKE OF ARGYLL Reign of Law p. 4. [AL. S. 1867.]

2. A class or group into which things are assorted. 3. A collection or stock of various things, whether of the same or different kinds; as, an assortment of goods.

Latimer went beyond everybody else in the miscellaneous assortment of topics he used to bring together.
CRAIK Eng. Lit. and Lang., Latimer in vol. i, p. 438. [S. 1864.]

As′sos, 1 as′os; 2 ăs′ŏs, n. Bib. Acts xx, 13.

as-sot′†. I. v. To infatuate; be infatuated. II. a. Dazed: in this sense sometimes written assote.

A. S. S. U., abbr. American Sunday-school Union.

as-suade′, vt. [Rare or Obs.] To give as advice.

as-suage′, 1 a-swēj′; 2 ă-swāj′, v. [AS-SUAGED′; AS-SUAG′ING.] I. t. 1. To cause to be less harsh, violent, or severe, as excitement, appetite, pain, or disease; soothe; allay; appease; abate.

God shall assuage thy pangs — when I am laid in dust.
CAMPBELL Gertrude of Wyoming pt. iii, st. 29.

2. To allay the excitement, agitation, or resentment of; calm; as, my entreaties assuaged the offended dame.

II. i. [Archaic.] To grow less, as in volume or violence; abate; subside; diminish; as, the waters assuage.

We'll wait the storm's assuaging — is not heaven above us all?
DINAH M. CRAIK An Andante of Mendelssohn's st. 1.

[< OF. asuager, < L. ad, to, + suavis, sweet.] as-swage′†; a-swage′†. SYN.: see ALLEVIATE.— PREP.: assuage with remedies, by treatment; assuage his anger with gentle words, by persuasion.— as-suage′ment, n. 1. The act of assuaging, or the state of being assuaged. 2. That which assuages; an alleviative; sedative.— as-suag′er, n.

As″su-an′, 1 as′u-ān′; 2 ăs″u-än′, n. A province in Upper Egypt; 169 sq. m.; capital, Assuan (ancient Sy-e′ne), where a dam 6,397 ft. long was built in 1898. As″sou-an′†; A-swan′†.

as-sua′siv(es. [Rare.] I. a. That soothes and persuades at once; tranquillizing; confused with assuage.

JOHNSON Irene act i, sc. 1.

II. n. An alleviative. [< AD- + -suasive in PERSUASIVE.]

As″su-e′rus, 1 as′yu-ī′rus; 2 ăs″yu-ē′rŭs, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). Tob. xiv, 15.

as-sume′, 1 a-siūm′; 2 ă-sūm′, v. [AS-SUMED′; AS-SUM′ING.] I. t. 1. To take to or put on oneself; arrogate to oneself; take up; take on; adopt; as, to assume the robes of office; to assume a haughty mien: sometimes approaching the sense of presume; as, do you assume to do thus?

Still let my song a nobler note assume.
THOMSON Seasons, Spring l. 867.

2. To take upon oneself; undertake; as, "to assume the duties of general in chief." GRANT Memoirs vol. i, p. 393. [C. L. W. 1885.] 3. To claim or treat as conceded; take for granted, as a basis for reasoning, suppose.

We assume that the forces in the world are essentially the same through all time. DANA Geology intro., p. 7. [BL. & CO. 1870.]

4. To put on deceitfully; take the semblance of; affect; pretend; outwardly seem: often with the infinitive to be; as, to assume a virtuous air; to assume to be deaf. 5. To receive; adopt. 6. Logic. To add as a minor premise. 7. [Archaic.] To take in; subsume.

II. i. To be presumptuous. [< L. assumo, < ad, to, + sumo, take (< sub, under, + emo, buy).]

SYN.: accept, affect, appropriate, arrogate, claim, feign, postulate, presume, pretend, put on, take, usurp. The distinctive idea of assume is to take by one's own independent volition, whether well or ill, rightfully or wrongfully. One may accept an obligation or assume an authority that properly belongs to him, or he may assume an obligation or indebtedness that could not be required of him. He may assume authority or office that is his right; if he assumes what does not belong to him, he is said to arrogate or usurp it. A man may usurp the substance of power in the most unpretending way; what he arrogates to himself he assumes with a haughty and overbearing manner. One assumes the robes or insignia of office by putting them on, with or without right. If he takes to himself the credit and appearance of qualities he does not possess, he is said to affect or feign or to pretend to, the character he thus assumes. What a debater postulates he openly states and takes for granted without proof; what he assumes he may take for granted without mention. A favorite trick of the sophist is quietly to assume as true what would at once be challenged if expressly stated. What a man claims he asserts his right to take; what he assumes he takes.

— as-sum′a-bl(e†, a. Capable of being assumed.— -bly, adv.— as-sumed′, pa. 1. Taken for granted; conceded; as, an assumed premise. 2. Pretended; fictitious; as, an assumed name.— as-sum′ed-ly, adv.— as-su′ment†, n. 1. An addition. 2. One who assumes or takes.— as-sum′er, n.— as-sum′ing, pa. Disposed to arrogate to oneself more than is proper; presumptuous; arrogant.— as-sum′ing-ly, adv.— as-sum′ing-ness, n.

as-sump′sit, 1 a-sump′sıt; 2 ă-sŭmp′sit, n. Law. 1. An obligation not under seal. 2. A form of action at common law to enforce an obligation not under seal. Assumpsits are known from the purposes to which they are applied: express or special assumpsit, one in which the purpose is to secure damages on a contract not under seal; general or common a., one in which the purpose is to secure liquidated damages, as in express contracts and, by extension, often in cases involving financial obligations not recoverable as damages. [L., 3d per. s. perf. ind. act. of assumo; see ASSUME.]

as-sump′tion[1], 1 a-sump′shən; 2 ă-sŭmp′shon, n. 1. The act of assuming, or that which is assumed; a taking for granted, or that which is taken for granted; postulate; esp., a taking for granted without reason or warrant; supposition; as, all science is based on the assumption of causation.

AGASSIZ Geol. Sketches sketch vi, p. 154. [T. & F. 1866.]

It is a mere assumption . . . that inability removes responsibility. SPURGEON Illustrations p. 53. [F. & W.]

2. The act of taking up, or to oneself; appropriation; undertaking; as, the assumption of an office; the assumption of a mortgage. 3. A disposition to assume too much; arrogance; as, he has a deal of assumption.

I reverence these young Africans of our own growth — these almost clergy imps, who sport their cloth without assumption. LAMB Essays of Elia, Praise of Chimney-Sweepers p. 169. [W. L. & CO.]

4. Logic. A minor premise.

Still more objectionable are the . . . terms Proposition and Assumption, as synonyms for the major and minor premises. . . . The term assumption does not express the distinctive peculiarity of the minor premise. HAMILTON Logic p. 200. [G. & L. 1860.]

5. The receiving up of a person into heaven. [< L. assumptio(n-), < assumptus, pp. of assumo; see ASSUME.]

SYN.: see ARROGANCE; ASSURANCE; PRETENSE.

— Feast of the Assumption (R. C. Ch.), the festival, celebrated on the 15th of August, commemorating the taking up into heaven of the Virgin Mary in body and soul.

As-sump′tion[2], n. 1. A parish in Louisiana; 485 sq. m.; parish-seat, Napoleonville. 2. A village in Christian county, Ill.

as-sump′tious, a. [Rare.] Disposed to assume; assuming; presuming.— as-sump′tious-ness, n.

as-sump′tive, } 1 a-sump′tıv; 2 ă-sŭmp′tiv, a. Charas-sump′tiv[s], } acterized by assumption; assumed; assuming.— assumptive arms (Her.), arms not inherited, but borne by permission of authority or without sanction.— as-sump′tiv(e-ly[s], adv.

as-sump′tu-al, 1 a-sump′chu-[or -tiu-]əl; 2 ă-sŭmp′chu-[or -tū-]al, a. Law. Pertaining to the obligation created by assumpsit, or simple promise. [< L. assumptus; see ASSUMPTION.]

As′sur, 1 as′ūr; 2 ăs′ûr, n. Bib. (Apocrypha). 1 Esd. v, 31.

as-sur′a-ble, } 1 a-shūr′ə-bl; 2 ă-shur′a-bl, a. 1. That as-sur′a-bl[e], } can be assured. 2. Insurable.

as-sur′ance, 1 a-shūr′əns; 2 ă-shur-anç, n. 1. The act of assuring; a declaration that inspires confidence or is intended to do so; promise; pledge; as, I received full assurances that our neutrality should be respected. 2. The mental state or feeling of being assured; confidence; conviction; trust; reliance; as, to have full assurance of safety.

The assurance that God is gives us perfect confidence.
O. B. FROTHINGHAM Religion of Humanity p. 5. [D. O. F. 1873.]

3. The state of being free from timidity: often in a bad sense; as, his assurance amazed me. 4. Insurance, as of life or property.

The law of averages in life assurance societies is now the pedestal of adamant on which stands . . . the . . . principle of total abstinence. JOSEPH COOK Occident p. 153. [H. M. & CO. 1884.]

5. Law. The legal evidence of the transfer of property whereby a man's estate is assured to him.

Common assurance is a conveyance or muniment of title to lands, by (1) deed, (2) record, (3) special custom, or (4) devise. Further a. is the covenant in a deed whereby the grantor engages to supply any further confirmation of title requisite to make good any defect in his grant. Compare INSURANCE.

6. Theol. The full confidence of present personal salvation, wrought by the witness of the Divine Spirit in him who believes in Christ. 7. [Archaic.] Firmness of mind; courage. [F., < LL. assecurantia, < assecuro; see ASSURE.]

SYN.: arrogance, assertion, assumption, boldness, confidence, effrontery, impudence, presumption, self-assertion, self-confidence, self-reliance. Assurance may have a good sense; as, the saint's assurance of heaven. Confidence is founded upon reasons; assurance is largely a matter of feeling. In the bad sense, assurance is belief in one's ability to outwit or defy others; the hardened criminal is remarkable for habitual assurance. For the calm conviction of one's own rectitude and ability, self-confidence is a better word than assurance; self-reliance expresses confidence in one's own resources, independently of others' aid. In the bad sense assurance is less gross than impudence, which is (according to its etymology) a shameless boldness. Assurance is in act or manner; impudence may be in speech. Effrontery is impudence defiantly displayed. See ARROGANCE; FAITH.— Ant.: bashfulness, consternation, dismay, distrust, misgiving, self-distrust, shyness, timidity.

As"sur-ban'i-pal, n. Same as ASHUR-BANI-PAL.

As-sure', 1 ə-shûr'; 2 ă-shur', v. [AS-SURED'; AS-SUR'ING.] I. t. 1. To offer assurances to; endeavor to impart conviction to; assert something earnestly to as a ground of confidence; as, I assure you that truth will prevail. 2. To cause to feel certain; give confidence to; convince; as, to assure one of esteem: largely in the passive.

A man's religion consists not of the many things he is in doubt of and tries to believe, but of the few he is assured of.
CARLYLE Latter-Day Pamphlets, Jesuitism p. 266. [c. & n. 1850.]

3. To make certain, as in occurrence or continuance; guarantee; as, this edict assures a revolution: more frequently insure. 4. To confirm in conviction; encourage; embolden. 5. To insure, as against loss. 6†. To betroth; affiance.

II. i. 1. To take up insurance: a Briticism. 2†. To trust; rely; dare. [< F. assurer, < LL. assecuro, < L. ad, to; and see SECURE, a.] Syn.: affirm, assert, asseverate, aver, avouch, certify, inform. To assure is to state with such authority and confidence as the speaker feels ought to make the hearer sure. Certify is more formal, and applies rather to written documents or legal processes. Assure, certify, inform apply to the person; affirm, etc., to the thing. Assert is combative; assure is conciliatory. I assert my right to cross the river; I assure my friend it is perfectly safe. See AFFIRM; ASSERT; AVER.— Prep.: I assure you of its truth.

as-sured', 1 ə-shûrd'; 2 ă-shurd', pa. 1. Made certain; undoubted.

Assyr., abbr. Assyrian.

As-syr'i-a, 1 ə-sir'ı-ə; 2 ă-sŷr'i-a, n. An ancient empire in S. W. Asia; capital, Nineveh, now in ruins. It occupied the northern portion of the Mesopotamian plain, extended about 350 miles from north to south, and was from 170 to 300 miles wide. It was watered by the river Tigris and its tributaries. The history of Assyria may be traced as far back as 2300 B. C. In civilization, arts, science, and government the ASSYRIANS partook of the character of the Babylonians. Under Tiglath-Pileser I., Assyria overthrew Babylonia toward the close of the eleventh century. Compare BABYLONIA.

The two great empires Assyria and Babylon . . . can be separated as little historically as geographically. This interdependence of Assyrian and Babylonian history was recognized by ancient writers, and has been confirmed by modern discovery.
Encyc. Brit. 11th ed. vol. ii, p. 790.

[L., < Gr. Assyria.]

As-syr'i-an, 1 ə-sir'ı-ən; 2 ă-sŷr'i-an, a. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of Assyria or its people. As-syr'i-ac†.— Assyrian architecture, a branch of Mesopotamian architecture correlated with the Babylonian, which was earlier, exhibited primarily in palaces that were low but massive and imposing, built of sun-burned bricks, with abundant use of the semicircular vault, and incrustation of carved slabs of stone and other rich decoration in the interiors. See ARCHITECTURE.— A. art, a later development of ancient Mesopotamian art, characterized chiefly by decoration in low relief, conventional human figures, animals exhibiting surprising life, and details carefully wrought out. See ASSHUR.— A. Church, the Nestorian Church.— A. plum, the sebesten.

As-syr'i-an, n. 1. A native of Assyria or the Assyrian empire. The Assyrians were Semitic in race.

a-strand′, 1 ə-strand′; 2 a-străn̆d′, adv. & a. Aground; stranded.

as″tra-pho′bi-a, 1 as″trə-fō′bi-ə; 2 ăs″tra-fō′bi-a, n. Pathol. Morbid terror excited by thunder-storms or other electric disturbances. [< Gr. astrapē, thunder and lightning, + -PHOBIA.] as″tra-po-pho′bi-a‡.

As″tra-po-the′ri-um, 1 as″trə-po-thī′ri-um; 2 ăs″tra-po-thē′ri-ŭm, n. Geol. A fossil genus of large toxodonts of Patagonia, in which each jaw was furnished with a pair of huge tusks. [< Gr. astrapē, lightning, + thērion, beast.]

a-stray′, 1 ə-strē′; 2 a-strā′, ri. [Archaic.] To stray away; wander; be lost.

a-stray′, adv. & a. Away from the right path; wandering; hence, in or into error or evil; as, to lead one astray.

COWPER Task bk. iii, l. 124.

a-stream′, 1 ə-strim′; 2 a-strēm′, adv. As the stream flows; in the direction of the stream.

as-tre′an, 1 as-trī′ən; 2 ăs-trē′an, a. Of, pertaining to, or like the stars. as-træ′an‡.

as′tre-at″ed, 1 as′trī-ēt″ed; 2 ăs′tre-āt′ĕd, a. [Rare.] Decked out with ornamental stars. [< L. astrum; see ASTRAL.]

A-strep″si-neu′ra, 1 ə-strep′si-nū′rə; 2 a-strĕp′si-nū′ra, n. pl. Conch. A division of gastropods, including the opisthobranchiates and pulmonates. [< A-, not, + Gr. strepsis, bending, + neuron, tendon.]

as′trer, n. [Archaic.] A peasant householder, at the home where he was bred. [M.] [< OF. astre, home.]

as-tric′t, 1 as-trikt′; 2 ăs-trict′, tr. [Rare.] 1. To bind up; constrict. 2. To bind down; restrict; limit.

It would not be more absurd to tolerate a persuasive mathematician, than to astrict an orator to demonstration.
HAMILTON Discussions pt. iii, essay i. p. 268. [H. 1855.]

3. Scots Law. To limit or restrict the use or tenure of, as land. [< L. astrictus, pp. of astringo; see ASTRINGE.]

as-tric′tion, 1 as-trik′shən; 2 ăs-tric′shon, n. 1. The act of binding close together, or the state of being bound. 2. Med. The action of astringents; constipation. 3. Surg. The effect of means employed to stop hemorrhages, as ligatures or styptics. 4. Scots Law. The obligation of the possessor of certain lands to have the grain raised thereon ground at a particular mill, and to pay a stipulated toll. The lands were said to be astricted to the mill. 5†. Restriction; obligation.

as-tric'tive, } Producing astriction; astringing; styptic.
2. Restrictive; obligatory.— as-tric'tiv(e-ly), adv.— as-tric'tiv(e-ness), n.

a-stride', 1 ə-straid'; 2 a-strid', adv. & prep. With one leg on each side of, or with the legs stretched apart.

Witch astride of a human hack.
WHITTIER Skipper Ireson's Ride st. 1.

as-trif'er-ous, 1 as-trif'or-us; 2 ăs-trif'er-ŭs, a. Bearing stars; starry. [< L. astrifer, < astrum (see ASTRAL) + -fero, bear.] as-trig'er-ous†.

As'trild, 1 as'trild; 2 ăs'trild, n. Ornith. Same as ESTRILD.

A'strild, 1 ā'strild; 2 ā'strild, n. Norse Myth. The god of love; the northern Cupid.

as-tringe', 1 as-trinj'; 2 ăs-trĭng', v. [AS-TRINGED'; AS-TRING'ING.] I. t. To bind together; compress; constrain.

II. i. To become solid. [< L. astringo, < ad, to, + stringo, bind fast.]

as-trin'gen-cy, 1 as-trin'jen-sı; 2 ăs-trĭn'ĝĕn-çy, n. [-CIES, 1 -sız; 2 -çiş, pl.] The quality or state of being astringent.

We thought of the slight astringencies of her character.
MRS. GASKELL Charlotte Brontë vol. ii, p. 19. [A. 1886.]

as-trin'gent, 1 as-trin'jent; 2 ăs-trĭn'ĝĕnt, a. 1. Having the as a sour fruit or acid, the power to contract or draw together the soft organic tissues, thus aiding in diminishing secretion or discharge; binding; constipative; styptic: opposed to laxative. 2. Harsh in disposition or character; stern; austere.

Each man like each plant has his parasites. A strong astringent bilious nature has more truculent enemies than the slugs and moths that fret my leaves.
EMERSON Conduct of Life p. 41. [T. & Y. 1860.]

as-trin'gent, n. Any astringent substance. Among medical astringents are various mineral acids, alum, galls, oak-bark, tannin, etc.

as-trin'ger, n. Same as AUSTRINGER.

as'trite, 1 as'trait; 2 ăs'trit, n. See ASTERIA; ASTROITE.

as'tro-, 1 as'tro-; 2 ăs'tro-. From Greek astron, star: a combining form: in zoological and botanical words usually denoting star-shape, or the possession of some star-shaped appendage.— As"tro-ca'ry-um, n. Bot. A genus of tropical American palms having pinnate leaves, slender stems, and petioles with long spines. A. tucuma yields a valuable fiber.— as"tro-chem'is-try, n. Astron. The branch of astronomy which treats of the known chemistry of the stars.— as"tro-chem'ist, n.— as"tro-chron"o-log'i-cal, a. Relating to the chronology of the celestial bodies.— as'tro-cyte, n. Anat. One of the star-shaped cells of osseous tissue; a bone-corpuscle; osteoblast.

Other words beginning with this prefix will be found in alphabetical place, either singly or in groups.

as'tro-fel, 1 as'tro-fel; 2 ăs'tro-fĕl, n. An unidentified plant, thought by some to be Veronica chamædrys, mentioned by Spenser, who gave it this name probably in honor of his friend Sir Philip Sidney, who called himself "Astrophel" in his sonnets entitled Astrophel and Stella. as'tro-fell†; as'tro-phel†.

As"tro-fl"am-man'te, 1 as'trō-fl"am-mān'tē; 2 ăs'trō-fl"-ăm-măn'tę, n. Literally, flaming star; in Mozart's Magic Flute, the queen of night.

as-trog'e-ny, n. The doctrine of the genesis of the heavenly bodies. as-trog'o-ny†.— as"tro-gon'ic, a.— as-trog'no-sy, n. Knowledge of the stars, particularly of the fixed stars.— as-trog'ra-phy, n. The mapping or describing of stars.— as"tro-graph'ic, a.

as'troid, 1 as'treid; 2 ăs'trŏid, n. 1. Her. A star of more than 5 points. 2. Math. A plane curve of the sixth class and fourth order. [< Gr. astroeidēs, < astron (see ASTRAL); and see -OID.]

as'tro-ite, 1 as'tro-ait; 2 ăs'tro-it, n. 1. A gem of the ancients, probably a sapphire; asteria. 2. Any radiated gem or fossil; star-stone. as'tro-it†.

astrol., abbr. Astrologer; astrological; astrology.

as'tro-labe, 1 as'tro-lēb; 2 ăs'tro-lāb, n. Astron. 1. An instrument of various forms, often an armillary sphere, formerly used, esp. in navigation, for obtaining the altitudes of planets and stars, now superseded by the sextant. Compare SEXTANT.

He'd take his astrolabe, and seek out here
DRYDEN Death of Lord Hastings l. 45.

2. A projection of the sphere upon the plane of the equator, or of any great circle of the earth. [F., < LL. astrolabium, < Gr. astrolabon, < astron (see ASTRAL) + lambanō, take.] as-trol'o-byt.— as"tro-lab'i-cal, a.

As'tro-labe Bay. A bay in N. E. New Guinea.

as-trol'a-try, 1 as-trol'a-trı; 2 ăs-trŏl'a-try, n. Adoration of the stars.

Astrolatry included not only the worship of the heavenly bodies or pure Sabism, but likewise that of many other material visible objects. W. J. HORT New Pantheon p. 122. [L. G. & CO. 1845.]
—as-trol'at-er, n.

as"tro-li-thol'o-gy, n. The science of meteoric stones.

as-trol'o-ger, 1 as-trol'o-jər; 2 ăs-trŏl'o-ger, n. 1. An interpreter of the supposed influence of the stars upon the destinies of men; one who practises astrology.

POPE Temple of Fame l. 462.

2†. An astronomer. [< L. astrologus, < Gr. astrologos, < astron (see ASTRAL) + legō, speak.] as"tro-lo'gi-an†.

as-trol'o-gize, 1 as-trol'o-jaiz; 2 ăs-trŏl'o-ĝīz, v. [-GIZED; -GIZ'ING.] I. t. To determine by means of astrology. II. i. To study or practise astrology. as-trol'o-gise†.

as-trol'o-gy, 1 as-trol'o-jı; 2 ăs-trŏl'o-ĝy, n. 1. Anciently, the science of the stars; esp., practical astronomy, or the art of applying astronomy to human uses, as by the calculation and prediction of natural phenomena. This was the ancient astronomy.

Astrology's Last home, a musty pile of almanacs.
WHITTIER Bridal of Pennacook prel., st. 5.

2. The doctrine of the influence of the heavenly bodies upon events natural or moral; esp., the investigation of the aspects, configurations, etc., of the planets, and their imagined influence upon the destinies of men; astromancy; star-divination.

The term became limited, in the 17th century, to this later pseudo-science, or mundane or judicial astrology. According to its teachings, the planet under which a man is born is supposed to decide his temperament, and the particular conjunction of planets to be decisive of his destiny.

The belief in astrology was almost universal in the middle of the 17th century. SCOTT Guy Mannering p. 30. [D. F. & CO.]
[< OF. astrologie, < L. astrologia, < Gr. astrologia, < astron (see ASTRAL); and see -OLOGY.] as-trol'o-gict.

— natural astrology, same as ASTROLOGY, 1.

As-trol'y-tes, 1 as-trol'ı-tiz; 2 ăs-trŏl'y-tēs, n. Ich. A genus of sculpins found abundantly in the waters of the Californian coast.

as"tro-mag'ı-cal, a. Astromantic.— as'tro-man"cy, n. Divination by the stars; astrology.— as'tro-man"cer, n.— as"tro-man'tic, a.— as"tro-me"te-or-ol'o-gy, n. The study of the supposed influence of the heavenly bodies on our atmosphere; especially, the art of forecasting the weather on this basis.— as"tro-me"te-or-o-log'i-cal, a.— as"tro-me"te-or-ol'o-gist, n.— as-trom'e-ter, n. Astron. An instrument to measure the relative brightness of stars.

as-trom'e-try, 1 as-trom'ı-trı; 2 ăs-trŏm'e-try, n. Astron. 1. That branch of astronomy which determines the apparent positions and magnitudes of the heavenly bodies by the measurement of angles and time. 2†. Astrophotometry. [< ASTRO- + Gr. metron, measure.]— as"tro-met'ri-cal, a.

astron., abbr. Astronomical; astronomy.

As"tro-nes'thi-dæ, 1 as'tro-nes'thi-dı; 2 ăs'tro-nĕs'thi-dē, n. pl. Ich. A family of inlomous fishes having the dorsal near the middle of the body, an adipose fin, and a hyoid barbel. As"tro-nes'thes, n. (t. g.) — as"tro-nes'thid, n. — as"tro-nes'thoid, a. & n.

as-tron'o-mer, 1 as-tron'o-mər; 2 ăs-trŏn'o-mer, n. 1. One learned in astronomy or engaged in advancing astronomical knowledge; a skilled observer of the stars, or a student of the laws that govern their motions and phenomena.

The astronomer and geologist will settle . . . the length of geological time. JOSEPH COOK Biology p. 55. [H. M. & CO. 1884.]

2†. An astrologer. [< L. astronomia; see ASTRONOMY.] as"tro-no'mi-ant; as-tron'o-mist†.

— Astronomer Royal, the official title of the director of a government observatory in Great Britain: when unqualified, restricted to Greenwich Observatory: in other cases written Astronomer Royal for Scotland, etc.

as"tro-nom'i-cal, } 1 as'tro-nom'ı-kəl, -ık; 2 ăs'tro-as"tro-nom'ic, } nŏm'i-cal, -ic, a. Of or pertaining to astronomy.

DRAPER Conflict bet. Religion and Science p. 115. [A. 1876.]

ASTRONOMICAL SIGNS.

☉ Sun; in notation, the sun's true longitude: a circular shield. ● New Moon. ☽ or ☾ Moon, first quarter. ○ Full moon. ☾ or ☽ Moon, last quarter. ☿ Mercury: the caduceus. ♀ Venus: a looking-glass. ⊕ Earth. ♂ Mars: a helmet and plume. ♃ Jupiter: an eagle. ♄ Saturn: a scythe. ♅ Uranus. ♆ Neptune: a trident. ♅ Herschel (Uranus): H with depending planet (obsolete). ♆ Leverrier (Neptune): L V with depending planet (obsolete). ① ② ③, etc. The asteroids, in the order of their discovery. Ⓒ being Ceres, ② Pallas, etc. See table under PLANET. ☄ Comet. ✳ Star. ☌ Conjunction: used between the symbols of heavenly bodies to indicate that they have the same right ascension or the same longitude; as, ♀ ☌ ☉, Venus in conjunction with the sun. ☍ Opposition: used between the symbols of bodies to indicate that they are 180° apart in longitude or right ascension; as, ♃ ☍ ☾, Jupiter in opposition to the moon. △ 1. Trine: used to indicate that bodies are 120° apart. 2. In notation, distance. □ Quadrature: used to indicate that bodies are 90° apart. Ω Ascending node; also, longitude of ascending node: a dragon's head. ℧ Descending node: a dragon's tail. + North. — South. a Mean distance. β Celestial latitude. δ Declination. e Eccentricity. ι Inclination to the ecliptic. λ 1. Longitude. 2. Wave-length. μ Mean daily motion. π Longitude of perihelion. q Perihelion distance of a comet. φ 1. Geog. Latitude. 2. Angle of eccentricity, or the angle whose sine equals eccentricity. The Greek letters are also used to name the stars of the different constellations, the more conspicuous being named, α, β, etc. Where several stars close together are so named, superior numerals indicate which one of the number is meant; as, μ^1 Scorpionis. The Roman small letters, a, b, etc., are used to designate other stars in a constellation not known to early observers. Capitals are used to designate the variable stars of a constellation. Stars are also numbered as they appear in some catalog, as Flamsteed's, which begins with 1 for each constellation, so that δ Serpentis appears as 13 Serpentis when Flamsteed's notation is used. For signs of the zodiac, see SIGN.

as-tron'o-mize, 1 as-tren'o-maiz; 2 ăs-trŏn'o-mīz, vi. [-MIZED; -MIZ'ING.] To study or practise astronomy. as-tron'o-mise†.

as-tron'o-my, 1 as-tren'o-mı; 2 ăs-trŏn'o-my, n. 1. The science that treats of the celestial bodies, their motions, magnitudes, distances, and physical constitution. The study of the earth, except in its bearing on the heavenly bodies, is embraced by other sciences, as geology and geography. The modern European science began with Copernicus (see COPERNICAN) and was advanced notably by Kepler, Galileo, Newton, and Laplace.

The only branch of knowledge which the Arabians ever raised to a science was astronomy, which began to be cultivated under the caliphs about the middle of the eighth century.
BUCKLE Hist. Civilization vol. i, p. 35, note. [A. 1880.]

Hipparchus . . . appears to be the author of every great step in ancient astronomy. Edinburgh Review July, 1891, p. 36.

2. A treatise on this science. 3†. Astrology. [< OF. astronomie, < L. astronomia, < Gr. astronomia, < astron (see ASTRAL) + nemō, distribute.] as"tro-nom'ics†.

— descriptive astronomy, a general description of celestial phenomena and astronomical laws; general astronomy. — physical a., astronomy treated as a branch of physics; esp., the investigation of the physical constitution of the heavenly bodies, and of their motions and figures, as results of the mechanical forces which produce them. — mechanical a.†.— practical a., the art and science of making observations with astronomical instruments and deriving their immediate results.— spherical a., the application of geometry and trigonometry to the determination of the apparent positions of the heavenly bodies.— theoretical a., the investigation of the orbits and motions of the heavenly bodies.

The following list contains some of the terms used specifically in astronomy. Additional matter will be found under some of the most important terms, as PLANET, SATELLITE, STAR.

As"tro-pec-tin'ı-dæ, n. pl. Echin. A family of phanerozonate starfishes with massive marginal plates and no anus. As"tro-pec'ten, n. (t. g.) — as"tro-pec'ti-nid, a. & n.— as"tro-pec'ti-nold, a. & n.— as'tro-phil, n. One who loves the study of the stars; an astronomer. as'tro-phile†. — As"tro-phi-u'ri-dæ, n. pl. Echin. A family of ophiurans with a large pentagonal disk, aborted rays, very broad cavity between the arms, and no teeth. As"tro-phi-u'ra, n. (t. g.) — as"tro-phi-u'rid, n.— as"tro-phi-u'roid, a.— As"troph'o-ra, n. pl. Spong. A tribe of choristidans with star-like microscleres.— as-troph'o-ran, a. & n.

as"tro-pho-tom'e-ter, 1 as'tro-fo-tem'ı-tər; 2 ăs'tro-fo-tŏm'e-ter, n. Astron. An instrument for determining the brightness of stars by comparing them with an artificial star of standard brightness.— as"tro-pho"to-met'ri-cal, a.— as"tro-pho-tom'e-try, n.

as"tro-phyl'lite, 1 as'tro-fil'ait; 2 ăs'tro-fȳl'it, n. Mineral. A submetallic bronze-yellow micaceous silicate ($H_4(KNa)_2(FeMn)_5(SiTiZr)_7O_{22}$), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. [< ASTRO- + Gr. phyllon, leaf.]

as"tro-phys'ics, 1 as'tro-fiz'ıks; 2 ăs'tro-fȳş'ics, n. Astron. That branch of astronomy which treats of the appearance and physical constitution of the heavenly bodies, their spectra, colors, brightness, temperature, and general aspect. [< ASTRO- + PHYSICS.]— as"tro-phys'i-cal, a.— as"tro-phys'i-cist, n.

As"tro-phy-ton'ı-dæ, n. pl. Echin. A family of ophiurans with branching arms, including the basket-fish. As-troph'y-ton, n. (t. g.) As"tro-phyt'ı-dæ†.— as-troph'y-tid, as"tro-phyt'o-nid, n.— as-troph'y-toid, as"tro-phyt'o-noid, a.— As"tro-rhi-zid'e-a, n. pl. Protoz. An order of radiolarians with a test consisting of foreign particles.— as"tro-rhi-zid'e-an, a.— as'tro-scope, n. Astron. 1. Two cones placed base to base and having the heavens mapped thereon: used as a celestial globe. 2. A telescopic instrument for observing the stars.— as-tros'co-py†, n.

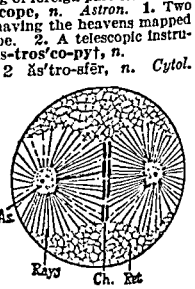
as'tro-sphere, 1 as'tro-sfir; 2 ăs'tro-sfēr, n. Cytol. 1. That part of the aster which does not include the rays; the attraction sphere. 2. The aster, comprising the archoplasm and the cytoplasmic rays, but excluding the centrosome.



Astrosphere.
Cell in process of division. Ax., astrosphere; Ch., chromosomes; Ret., reticulum.

as"tro-the-ol'o-gy, 1 as"tro-thi-el'o-jı; 2 ăs"tro-the-ŏl'o-ĝy, n. That branch of apologetics which treats of astronomy in connection with questions of natural or revealed religion.

As"truc', 1 as'trük'; 2 ăs'trŭc', Jean (3/15 1684–5/11 1766). A French physician and Biblical critic who first noted Jehovist and Elohist parts of Genesis.

a-strut', 1 ə-strut'; 2 a-strŭt', adv. & a. With a strut.

as-tu'cious, 1 as-tū'shus; 2 ăs-tū'shŭs, a. [Rare.] Worldly-wise; astute. [< F. astucieux; see ASTUTE.]

He accounted the fair spoken courtesy . . . as a false and astucious mark of the most dangerous designs against their neighbors.
SCOTT Talisman p. 73. [D. P. & CO.]

a-stun't, tr. To stun.

As-tu'ri-an, 1 as-tiū'ri-ən; 2 ăs-tū'ri-an. I. a. Of or pertaining to Asturias. II. n. An inhabitant of Asturias.— Asturian rose (Pathol.), a skin-disease resembling leprosy, peculiar to Asturias. See PELLAGRA.

As-tu'ri-as, 1 ąs-tū'ri-ąs; 2 ăs-tụ'rī-ăs, n. 1. A former province in N. W. Spain, named Oviedo province in 1833. 2. A town in Cebú, P. I.

as-tute', 1 as-tiūt'; 2 ăs-tūt', a. Keen in discernment; having acute penetration; sharp-sighted. [< L. astutus, < astus, cunning.]— as-tute'ly, adv.— as-tute'ness, n.

Syn.: acute, crafty, cunning, discerning, discriminating, keen, knowing, penetrating, penetrative, sagacious, sharp, shrewd, subtile, subtle. Acute, from the Latin, suggests the sharpness of the needle's point; keen, from the Saxon, the sharpness of the cutting edge. Astute has come to have a meaning that combines the sense of acute or keen with that of sagacious. The astute mind adds to acuteness and keenness an element of cunning or finesse. The astute debater leads his opponents into a snare by getting them to make admissions, or urge arguments, of which he sees a result that they do not perceive. The acute, keen intellect may take no special advantage of these qualities; the astute mind has always a point to make for itself, and seldom fails to make it.— Ant.: blind, dull, idiotic, imbecile, shallow, short-sighted, stolid, stupid.

As-ty'a-ges, 1 as-taĭ-ə-jīz; 2 ăs-tȳ'a-ġēs, n. Last king of Media (584–550 B. C.), dethroned by his grandson, Cyrus the Great.

As-ty'a-nax, 1 as-taĭ'ə-naks; 2 ăs-tȳ'a-năks, n. Myth. The son of Hector and Andromache. He figures in the Iliad, and after the fall of Troy the Greeks hurled him from the walls of the city, that the prophecy of Calchas, that Astyanax would restore the kingdom, might not be fulfilled. In Racine's Andromaque, Astyanax goes with his mother to Epirus and becomes king of that country.

a-sty'lar, 1 ə-staĭ'lər; 2 a-stȳ'lar, a. Arch. Having neither column nor pilaster. [< Gr. astylos, < a- priv. + stylos, pillar.] a-sty'lic†.

a"syl-lab'i-cal, 1 ē'sı-lab'ı-kəl; 2 ä"sy-läb'ĭ-cal, a. Not a-sy'lum, 1 ə-saĭ'lum; 2 a-sȳ'lŭm, n. 1. An institution, charitable or otherwise, for the care of some class of afflicted, unfortunate, or destitute persons; a retreat; as, asylums for the aged; an orphan asylum; a private insane asylum. [The name has been erroneously applied to purely educational institutions, as for the deaf and the blind.]

St. Basil . . . erected at Cæsarea what was probably the first asylum for lepers. LECKY Hist. Eur. Morals vol. ii, p. 85. [A. 1873.]

No one of the thousands of rich men living in Rome ever conceived the notion of founding an asylum for the poor, or a hospital for the sick. GEIKIE Life of Christ p. 9. [A. D. EX. 1880.]

2. A place of refuge; retreat; shelter.

The pack was becoming more and more unsafe, and I was extremely anxious to gain an asylum on shore.
KANE Arctic Explorations vol. i, p. 127. [C. & P. 1857.]

3. An inviolable shelter from arrest or punishment, as a temple or church in ancient times. 4. Inter. Law. An extraterritorial place accorded the privilege, by law, custom, or convention, of giving immunity from arrest to any person or persons sheltered within its precincts except by the consent of the state enjoying this privilege. See EXTRATERRITORIALITY. [L., < Gr. asylon, < a- priv. + sylon, right of seizure.]— right of asylum, the right anciently recognized for Greek and some other sanctuaries, and for Christian churches, monasteries, etc., of protecting from molestation any one who fled to them.

as"ym-bo'li-a, 1 as'ım-bō'lı-ə; 2 ăs'ym-bō'lĭ-a, n. Inability to understand the meaning of objects, due to cerebral disorder; especially, the loss of power to appreciate the signs or symbols of thought. [A-, not, + SYMBOL.]

a-sym"me-tran'thous, 1 ə-sim'ı-tran'thus; 2 a-sŷm'e-trăn'thŭs, a. Bot. Having the flowers asymmetrical. [< ASYMMETRY + Gr. anthos, flower.]

a"sym-met'ric, } 1 ē"[or ą']sı-met'rık, -rı-kəl; 2 ä"[or a"sym-met'ri-cal, } ä']sy-mĕt'rĭc, -rĭ-cal, a. 1. Without proper proportion of parts; unsymmetrical. 2. Org. Chem. Designating any benzene-produced compound when three hydrogen atoms (only two of which are adjacent) are replaced by similar atoms or radicals.

If the same radical is substituted for all three atoms of hydrogen, there may be formed three isomeric substitution-compounds; thus, there are three tribromobenzenes, $C_6H_3Br_3$, distinguished as adjacent (1 : 2 : 3), fusing at 87° C., symmetrical (1 : 3 : 5), fusing at 120° C., and asymmetrical (1 : 2 : 4), fusing at 44° C.
C. L. BLOXAM Chemistry p. 745. [P. B. & CO. 1890.]

3. Crystal. Not divisible into similar halves by a plane; triclinic. 4. Absolutely devoid of attempt to be symmetrical: distinguished by Herbert Spencer from unsymmetrical. 5. Math. Not commensurable. 6†. Not reconcilable. a-sym'me-tral†; a-sym'me-trous†.— asymmetric carbon atom (Chem.), a tetravalent carbon atom which is combined with four dissimilar groups or atoms. See STEREOISOMERISM.

Compounds which act on polarised light contain one or more asymmetric carbon-atoms, that is, carbon-atoms linked to four dissimilar radicals. C. L. BLOXAM Chemistry p. 749 [P. B. & CO. 1890.]

a-sym"me-tro-car'pous, 1 ə-sim'ı-tro-kär'pus; 2 a-sŷm'e-tro-căr'pŭs, a. Bot. Having the fruit asymmetrical. [< ASYMMETRY + Gr. karpos, fruit.]

a-sym'me-try, 1 ə-sim'ı-trı; 2 a-sŷm'e-try, n. 1. Absence of symmetry or proportion. 2. Want of coordination of interrelated parts, as of the eyes. 3. Chem. Lack of symmetrical arrangement of particular atoms in the molecule of a compound substance. 4†. Math. Incommensurability. [< Gr. asymmetria, < a- priv.; and see SYMMETRY.]

a-sym'phy-note, 1 ə-sim'fı-nōt; 2 a-sŷm'fy-nōt, a. Conch. Not soldered at the hinge, as the valves of most river-mussels. Compare SYMPHYNOTE. [< A-, not, + SYMPHYNOTE.]

as'ym-ptote, 1 as'ım-tōt; 2 ăs'ym-tōt, n. Math. A right line which an infinite branch of a curve continually approaches but does not reach, and which can be regarded as a tangent to the curve at infinity. [< Gr. asymptōtos, < a- priv. + syn, together, + piptō, fall.]— parabolic asymptote, a parabola which touches the cubic at infinity in a 5-pointic contact.— as'ym-pto-sy, n. The quality of being asymptotic. [M.]— as"ym-ptot'ic, a. Of or pertaining to an asymptote; approaching a state slowly but unceasingly, as a curve approaches its asymptote. as"ym-ptot'i-cal†.— as"ym-ptot'i-cal-ly, adv.

Asymptote.
The two branches of a hyperbola (h, h) with asymptotes (a, a).

a-syn'ar-tete, 1 ə-sin'ər-tīt; 2 a-sŷn'ar-tēt, a. 1. Not fitted together; unconnected; incongruous. 2. Anc. Pros. (1) Composed of differing meters. (2) Having interior catalexis at either the ending or beginning of the sections of a verse. [< Gr. asynartētos, < a- priv. + syn, together, + artaō, join.] a-syn"ar-tet'ic†.

a-syn'chro-nism, 1 ə-sin'kro-nizm; 2 a-sŷn'ero-nĭsm, n. Want of coincidence in time.— a-syn'chro-nous, a.

A-syn'cri-tus, 1 ə-sin'krı-tus; 2 a-sŷn'cri-tŭs, n. Bib. Rom. xvi, 14.

a-syn'de-ton, 1 ə-sin'de-tən; 2 a-sŷn'de-tŏn, n. 1. Gram. Absence of connection or coherence of parts.

In all continuous writing the connexion of sentences is the rule, the absence of connexion (asyndeton) the exception. There are two kinds of asyndeton,—the grammatical and the rhetorical.
WINER Gram. N. T. Greek tr. by Moulton, § 60. [T. & T. C. 1877.]

as"y-ner'gi-a, 1 as'ı-nūr'jı-ə; 2 ăs'ĭ-nĕr'ġi-a, n. Pathol. Defective central coordination of the muscles. [< Gr. a- priv. + synergia, synergy.] as'y-ner"gy‡.

as"y-ne'si-a, 1 as'ı-nī'shı-ə; 2 ăs'y-nē'shi-a, n. Pathol. Great mental dulness; stupidity. [< Gr. aynesia, < a- priv. + syn, together, + hiēmi, put.]

as"yn-ga'mi-a, 1 as'ın-gē'mı-ə; 2 ăs'yn-ġā'mi-a, n. Bot. The maturity of anthers and stigmas in a flower at different times: opposed to synacmy or synanthesis. [< Gr. a- priv. + syngamia, marriage.] as-yn'ga-my†.— as"yn-gam'ic, a.

As'yn-ja, 1 ūs'ın-yə; 2 ăs'yn-ya, n. [-JUR, 1 -yur; 2 -yur, pl.] Norse Myth. A goddess: feminine of As. As'yn-je†.

as"yn-tac'tic, 1 as'ın-tak'tık; 2 ăs'yn-tăc'tic, a. Lacking syntactic construction; irregular; ungrammatical.

a-sys'to-le, 1 ə-sis'to-lī; 2 a-sŷs'to-lē, n. Pathol. A condition in heart-disease in which the contraction is insufficient to free the ventricles of blood. [< A-, not, + SYSTOLE.] as-ys'to-lism†.— as"ys-tol'ic, a.

a-syz"y-get'ic, 1 ə-siz'ı-jet'ık; 2 a-sŷz'y-ġĕt'ic, a. Without syzygy or conjunction.

at, 1 at; 2 ăt, prep. [At primarily denotes simple occupancy of a point in space; whence arise numerous allied and figurative meanings, as of time, direction, etc., by which the word partakes of the meaning of numerous other prepositions and prepositional phrases.]

1. Of a point in space: (1) Occupying the exact position of; as, at the center; at the intersection of two lines. (2) In contact with; on; upon: with the relation somewhat indefinite; as, at the top of the ladder; at the bottom of the sea. (3) In proximity to; in the vicinity or region of; close to; by; near; as, they are at table; at my side: figuratively, often suggesting connection or responsibility. (4) Within the limits of; in; within; present in; as, at the ball-grounds; at college. 2. Of motion: (1) In the direction of; in reference to; upon the thought of; in pursuit of; in quest of; applying to; to; toward; after; as, he shot at the mark; to mock at the preacher; they are at me for money.

A great blow was about to be aimed at the Protestant religion.
MACAULAY England vol. i, p. 180. [P. S. & CO. 1849.]

JOSHUA REYNOLDS Literary Works vol. ii, p. 105. [W. B. 1835.]

[By ellipsis of a verb, at in colloquial use sometimes approaches a verbal sense; as, she up and at him.]

(2) By way of; through, as in entrance or exit; as, smoke came out at the windows.

And with grim laughter thrust us out at gates.
TENNYSON Princess iv, st. 35.

3. Of time: (1) On or upon the point or stroke of; upon the coming of; as, the train will start at 6.14 A. M.; Congress will adjourn at noon to-morrow.

At break of day I ventured forth.
WORDSWORTH The Oak and the Broom st. 11.

(2) During the lapse of; in; by; as, to lie awake at night; to muse at twilight; it is at present uncertain.

I live in constant expectation of hearing something worse, and, at the long run, am seldom disappointed. COWPER Works, To S. Rose, Mar. 11, 1790 p. 345. [P. S. & CO. 1856.]

4. Of occasion, cause, or instrument; on the happening of; on the utterance of; in response to; because of; by means of; through the agency of; as, rise at the word of command; at these words the audience broke into applause; pleased at something; sell goods at auction.

At thy rebuke they fled; at the voice of thy thunder they hasted away. Ps. civ, 7.

5. Of degree, rate, value, etc.: up to; amounting to; to the extent of; corresponding to; as, at least; at a dollar a yard; at eighty degrees.

Stories like these must be taken at what they are worth. E. A. FREEMAN Norman Conquest vol. ii, ch. 10, p. 476. [CL. P. 1868.]

6. Of relations in general: in; engaged in; occupied with; connected with; dependent on; in a state or condition of; as, at school; at prayer; at war; at bay; at one's mercy; at liberty; they soon saw what he was at. These are suggestions of a mind at ease. ADDISON Cato act i, sc. 1.

7. [Colloq., So. U. S.] Of purpose, relation, occupation, or the like: used simply as an intensive; as, where have you been at? where does he live at? 8†. With, by, or beside (a person). [ME. at, < AS. æt (= Goth. at), at, to.]

Syn.: about, because of, by, during, from, in, near, on, on occasion of, to, toward, with, within. As regards place, at is not used with names of countries; we say in England, in France, etc.; with names of cities and towns the use of at or in depends not chiefly upon the size of the place, but upon the point of view; when we think merely of the local or geographical point, we use at; when we think of inclusive space, we employ in; as, we arrived at Liverpool: there are few rich men in this village.

— at that [Colloq.], in addition; as well: an intensive use; as, only a penny — and a bad one at that. — to be at it, to be actively employed.

at'a-vism, 1 at'ə-vizm; 2 ăt'a-vĭsm, n. Recurrence or tendency to recur to an ancestral type or to any ancestral trait, deformity, or disease after its disappearance for two or more generations; intermittent heredity.

It remains justifiable to use atavism and 'reversion' as synonyms denoting the hereditary reappearance of characteristics which were latent in the parents at least, but which were expressed in definite—not problematical—ancestors near or remote. . . . An atavism is a harking back to a more or less remote ancestor . . . due to the re-assertion or re-awakening of ancestral contributions which have lain for several generations latent or unexpressed. . . . It is undesirable to use the term atavism unless the throw-back is to an ancestor more than two generations antecedent. J. A. THOMSON in Encyc. Rel. and Ethics vol. ii, pp. 167, 168. [s. '10.]

a'the-ism, 1 ē'thı-izm; 2 ā'thē-ĭşm, n. 1. The denial of or disbelief in God, as a First Cause, or Ground, of the universe. As dogmatic atheism it denies, as negative atheism it does not believe in, and as critical or skeptical atheism (or agnosticism) it doubts, the existence of God.

What is called positive or dogmatic atheism, so far from being the only kind of atheism, is the rarest of all kinds. . . . Every man is an atheist who does not believe that there is a God.

R. FLINT Agnosticism sec. 3, p. 53. [s. '03.]

Theism affirms, Atheism denies, Agnosticism ignores, the existence of any such Soul.

WAINWRIGHT Sophisms p. 247. [r. & w. 1883.]

FISKE Destiny of Man p. 13. [H. M. & CO. 1885.]

2. Disregard of God; godlessness in life or conduct.

What is called practical atheism is not a kind of thought or opinion, but a mode of life. . . . It is the living as if there were no God. R. FLINT Anti-Theistic Theories lect. i, p. 5. [w. & 1879.]

a'the-ist, 1 ē'thı-ist; 2 ā'thē-ĭst, n. One who holds or advocates atheism in any sense.

A nation of atheists never existed.

IRVING Columbus vol. i, bk. vi, ch. 10, p. 390. [G. P. P. 1860.]

A believer may be excused by the most hardened atheist for endeavoring to make him a convert. ADDISON Spectator Oct. 3, 1711.

Athen., abbr. Athenian.

A-the'na, 1 ə-thī'nə; 2 a-thē'na, n. Gr. Myth. The daughter of Zeus and Metis who sprang from the head of Zeus with a mighty war-cry and in complete armor. She is the Greek goddess of wisdom, war, counsel, protectress of Greek cities, and patroness of the useful and elegant arts, and supplies the type for the later Roman conception of Minerva: one of the chief of the Olympians; especially, as Pallas Athena, the tutelary deity of Athens. Her attributes are the serpent, the owl, and the ægis adorned with Medusa's head. Her images, Palladia, guarded the places where they were kept, especially that guarded in the citadel of Troy. The festivals in her honor were the Three Sacred Plows (seed-time), Procharisteria

(for all the magistrates at the end of winter), Skirophoria (for priests in summer), Oschophoria (the vintage), Chalkeia (industrial arts), Plynteria and Callynteria (cleaning the image in the Erechtheum), Arrhephoria (bringing of sacred objects from the temple of Aphrodite by night to the Acropolis through an underground passage), Panathenæa (new robes for adorning the image).

In the reign of Cecrops both Poseidon and Athena contended for the possession of Athens. The gods resolved that whichever of them produced a gift most useful to mortals should have possession. . . . Poseidon struck the ground with his trident and straightway a horse appeared. Athena then planted the olive. The gods . . . gave the city to the goddess from whom it was called Athenæ.

SMITH'S Classical Dict. ed. by E. H. Blakeney, p. 85.
